Course Category	Faculty of International Studies Specialized Courses
Theme	Using basic and somewhat linear expressions, students can convey their experiences and thoughts about everyday life and familiar social topics with a reasonable degree of coherence, in a manner that makes the main points clear.
Course Objectives and Overview	In this course, students concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese1B, Japanese1C, Japanese1D, Practical Japanese A-C, etc.), and through them aim to develop the ability to understand the main points of, and respond appropriately to, familiar topics frequently encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese. A further goal is for students to be able to seek the information they need and cope, with the help of others where necessary, in the many situations expected when living in Japanese. In class, students develop the ability to produce coherent, relatively short written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest, to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. They also aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their intentions to others, even if somewhat indirectly. To this end, students comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and proceed with their studies so as to use, with a certain degree of accuracy, the expressions, sentence patterns, and set phrases frequently used in relatively predictable situations. In this way, the course lays a foundation for continuous Japanese-language learning and aims to improve Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in real life and in future study and activities.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese1B, Japanese1C, Japanese1D, Practical Japanese A-C, etc.).
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・Students can understand concise texts centered on factual information within their own field of specialization or range of interest. ・Students can locate and understand necessary information and key points in everyday materials such as letters, brochures, and notices. ・Students can grasp the main points of simple newspaper articles on familiar topics and of well-edited advertisements. ・Students can understand the factual information in texts on familiar topics of interest, given time to reread. ・In addition, students can follow the flow of a text or narrative by predicting content from titles and headings and by attending to logical connectives and expressions of time.
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams	Japanese-Language Proficiency Test (JLPT), each level: Students aim to pass the July examination. ＊Details of the target level will be announced in each class.
Method of Feedback	Feedback on incorrect answers and similar matters will be given for quizzes and homework.

Theme	Using basic and somewhat linear expressions, students can convey their experiences and thoughts about everyday life and familiar social topics with a reasonable degree of coherence, in a manner that makes the main points clear.
Course Objectives and Overview	In this course, students concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese1B, Japanese1C, Japanese1D, Practical Japanese A-C, etc.), and through them aim to develop the ability to understand the main points of, and respond appropriately to, familiar topics frequently encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese. A further goal is for students to be able to seek the information they need and cope, with the help of others where necessary, in the many situations expected when living in Japanese. In class, students develop the ability to produce coherent, relatively short written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest, to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. They also aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their intentions to others, even if somewhat indirectly. To this end, students comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and proceed with their studies so as to use, with a certain degree of accuracy, the expressions, sentence patterns, and set phrases frequently used in relatively predictable situations. Theme	Using basic and somewhat linear expressions, students can convey their experiences and thoughts about everyday life and familiar social topics with a reasonable degree of coherence, in a manner that makes the main points clear.
Course Objectives and Overview	In this course, students concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese1A, Japanese1C, Japanese1D, Practical Japanese A-C, etc.), and through them aim to develop the ability to understand the main points of, and respond appropriately to, familiar topics frequently encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese. A further goal is for students to be able to seek the information they need and cope, with the help of others where necessary, in the many situations expected when living in Japanese. In class, students develop the ability to produce coherent, relatively short written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest, to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. They also aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their intentions to others, even if somewhat indirectly. To this end, students comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and proceed with their studies so as to use, with a certain degree of accuracy, the expressions, sentence patterns, and set phrases frequently used in relatively predictable situations. In this way, the course lays a foundation for continuous Japanese-language learning and aims to improve Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in real life and in future study and activities.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese1A, Japanese1C, Japanese1D, Practical Japanese A-C, etc.).
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・Students can understand concise texts centered on factual information within their own field of specialization or range of interest. ・Students can locate and understand necessary information and key points in everyday materials such as letters, brochures, and notices. ・Students can grasp the main points of simple newspaper articles on familiar topics and of well-edited advertisements. ・Students can understand the factual information in texts on familiar topics of interest, given time to reread. ・In addition, students can follow the flow of a text or narrative by predicting content from titles and headings and by attending to logical connectives and expressions of time.
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams	Japanese-Language Proficiency Test (JLPT), each level: Students aim to pass the July examination. ＊Details of the target level will be announced in each class.

Course Category	Faculty of International Studies Specialized Courses
Theme	Using basic and somewhat linear expressions, students can convey their experiences and thoughts about everyday life and familiar social topics with a reasonable degree of coherence, in a manner that makes the main points clear.
Course Objectives and Overview	In this course, students concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese1A, Japanese1C, Japanese1D, Practical Japanese A-C, etc.), and through them aim to develop the ability to understand the main points of, and respond appropriately to, familiar topics frequently encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese. A further goal is for students to be able to seek the information they need and cope, with the help of others where necessary, in the many situations expected when living in Japanese. In class, students develop the ability to produce coherent, relatively short written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest, to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. They also aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their intentions to others, even if somewhat indirectly. To this end, students comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and proceed with their studies so as to use, with a certain degree of accuracy, the expressions, sentence patterns, and set phrases frequently used in relatively predictable situations. In this way, the course lays a foundation for continuous Japanese-language learning and aims to improve Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in real life and in future study and activities.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese1A, Japanese1C, Japanese1D, Practical Japanese A-C, etc.).
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・Students can understand concise texts centered on factual information within their own field of specialization or range of interest. ・Students can locate and understand necessary information and key points in everyday materials such as letters, brochures, and notices. ・Students can grasp the main points of simple newspaper articles on familiar topics and of well-edited advertisements. ・Students can understand the factual information in texts on familiar topics of interest, given time to reread. ・In addition, students can follow the flow of a text or narrative by predicting content from titles and headings and by attending to logical connectives and expressions of time.
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams	Japanese-Language Proficiency Test (JLPT), each level: Students aim to pass the July examination. ＊Details of the target level will be announced in each class.
Method of Feedback	Feedback on incorrect answers and similar matters will be given for quizzes and homework.

Theme	Using basic and somewhat linear expressions, students can convey their experiences and thoughts about everyday life and familiar social topics with a reasonable degree of coherence, in a manner that makes the main points clear
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the ability to understand the main points of, and respond appropriately to, familiar topics frequently encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese. A further goal is for students to be able to seek the necessary information and cope, with the help of others where necessary, in the many situations expected when traveling in regions where Japanese is used. In class, students develop the ability to produce coherent, relatively short written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest, to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. They also aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their intentions to others, even if somewhat indirectly. To this end, students comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and proceed with their studies so as to use, with a certain degree of accuracy, the expressions, sentence patterns, and set phrases frequently used in relatively predictable situations. In this way, the course lays a foundation for continuous Japanese-language learning and aims to improve Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in real life and in future study and activities.

Theme	Using basic and somewhat linear expressions, students can convey their experiences and thoughts about everyday life and familiar social topics with a reasonable degree of coherence, in a manner that makes the main points clear.
Course Objectives and Overview	In this course, students concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese1A, Japanese1B, Japanese1D, Practical Japanese A-C, etc.), and through them aim to develop the ability to understand the main points of, and respond appropriately to, familiar topics frequently encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese. A further goal is for students to be able to seek the information they need and cope, with the help of others where necessary, in the many situations expected when living in Japanese. In class, students develop the ability to produce coherent, relatively short written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest, to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. They also aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their intentions to others, even if somewhat indirectly. To this end, students comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and proceed with their studies so as to use, with a certain degree of accuracy, the expressions, sentence patterns, and set phrases frequently used in relatively predictable situations. In this way, the course lays a foundation for continuous Japanese-language learning and aims to improve Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in real life and in future study and activities.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese1A, Japanese1B, Japanese1D, Practical Japanese A-C, etc.).
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・Students have the basic linguistic ability needed to manage daily life and, although their vocabulary is limited, can express their own views on familiar topics such as family, hobbies, interests, work, travel, and current affairs. ・Although repetition and hesitation may occur in their speech, in relatively predictable situations they can use frequently used expressions and patterns with generally sound accuracy. ・Moreover, on familiar topics, they can express themselves by using simple vocabulary appropriately.
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams	Japanese-Language Proficiency Test (JLPT), each level: Students aim to pass the July examination. ＊Details of the target level will be announced in each class.
Method of Feedback	Feedback on incorrect answers and similar matters will be given for quizzes and homework.

Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the ability to understand the main points of, and respond appropriately to, familiar topics frequently encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese. A further goal is for students to be able to seek the necessary information and cope, with the help of others where necessary, in the many situations expected when traveling in regions where Japanese is used. In class, students develop the ability to produce coherent, relatively short written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest, to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. They also aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their intentions to others, even if somewhat indirectly. To this end, students comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and proceed with their studies so as to use, with a certain degree of accuracy, the expressions, sentence patterns, and set phrases frequently used in relatively predictable situations. In this way, the course lays a foundation for continuous Japanese-language learning and aims to improve Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in real life and in future study and activities.

Grade	G1	Teaching Method	Lecture
Course Category	Faculty of International Studies Specialized Courses
Theme	In addition to understanding Japanese used in everyday situations, students can, to a certain degree, understand Japanese used in a wider range of situations.
Course Objectives and Overview	In this course, students concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese1A, Japanese1B, Japanese1C, Practical Japanese A-C, etc.), and through them aim to develop the ability to understand the main points of, and respond appropriately to, familiar topics frequently encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese. A further goal is for students to be able to seek the information they need and cope, with the help of others where necessary, in the many situations expected when living in Japanese. In class, students develop the ability to produce coherent, relatively short written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest, to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. They also aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their intentions to others, even if somewhat indirectly. To this end, students comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and proceed with their studies so as to use, with a certain degree of accuracy, the expressions, sentence patterns, and set phrases frequently used in relatively predictable situations. In this way, the course lays a foundation for continuous Japanese-language learning and aims to improve Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in real life and in future study and activities.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese1A, Japanese1B, Japanese1C, Practical Japanese A-C, etc.).
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・ When spoken clearly in standard speech or a familiar variety of the language, students can understand the main points of topics discussed in familiar settings such as work, school, and leisure. ・ When the speech is in a standard or familiar manner and clearly pronounced, they can understand the main points of extended discussions taking place around them. ・ Moreover, when spoken clearly and relatively slowly, they can understand the main points of discussions on familiar topics and of clear, straightforward monologues.

Theme	Using basic and somewhat linear expressions, students can convey their experiences and thoughts about everyday life and familiar social topics with a reasonable degree of coherence, in a manner that makes the main points clear
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the ability to understand the main points of, and respond appropriately to, familiar topics frequently encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese. A further goal is for students to be able to seek the necessary information and cope, with the help of others where necessary, in the many situations expected when traveling in regions where Japanese is used. In class, students develop the ability to produce coherent, relatively short written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest, to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. They also aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their intentions to others, even if somewhat indirectly. To this end, students comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and proceed with their studies so as to use, with a certain degree of accuracy, the expressions, sentence patterns, and set phrases frequently used in relatively predictable situations. In this way, the course lays a foundation for continuous Japanese-language learning and aims to improve Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in real life and in future study and activities.

Theme	Using basic and somewhat linear expressions, students can convey their experiences and thoughts about everyday life and familiar social topics with a reasonable degree of coherence, in a manner that makes the main points clear.
Course Objectives and Overview	In this course, students concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese2B, Japanese2C, Japanese2D, Practical Japanese D-F, etc.), and through them aim to develop the ability to understand the main points of familiar topics encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese, and to respond according to the situation. In addition, students develop the ability to cope appropriately while obtaining necessary information in the many situations expected when traveling in regions where Japanese is used. Furthermore, students use short, coherent written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. Even when vocabulary is limited, they aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their ideas by devising paraphrases and to take part in exchanges and discussions on familiar topics. To this end, the course comprehensively develops the five skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, while students learn frequently used expressions and phrases and the conventions of Japanese etiquette, with the aim of building a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used appropriately in real life.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese2B, Japanese2C, Japanese2D, Practical Japanese D-F, etc.).
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・Students can understand concise texts centered on factual information within their own field of specialization or range of interest. ・Students can skim and scan long texts to find the information needed to perform a task, and can gather information from different parts of a text or from several texts. ・They can also survey straightforward, fact-based texts in magazines, brochures, and on the web, and judge their content and practical usefulness. ・They can understand the viewpoints and opinions presented in simple explanatory texts of fact related to their own interests or fields of study, and in short texts on familiar topics. ・For argumentative texts with a clear claim, they can grasp the main conclusions and the general line of argument. Furthermore, by attending to connectives expressing number, time, and logical relations, and to the role of paragraphs, students can understand the argumentation of a text more deeply. They can infer the meaning of parts of a text from its overall flow and, in areas of interest or familiar topics, infer the meaning of unknown words and expressions from context in order to understand the meaning of a sentence.

Course Title	Japanese2A	Academic Year	Fall Semester, AY2026
Instructor	OGITA Tomoko	Year Level	1234
Course Numbering	For course numbering, please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/numbering.html	Credits	1 Credit
Grade	G1	Teaching Method	Lecture
Course Category	Faculty of International Studies Specialized Courses
Theme	Using basic and somewhat linear expressions, students can convey their experiences and thoughts about everyday life and familiar social topics with a reasonable degree of coherence, in a manner that makes the main points clear.
Course Objectives and Overview	In this course, students concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese2B, Japanese2C, Japanese2D, Practical Japanese D-F, etc.), and through them aim to develop the ability to understand the main points of familiar topics encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese, and to respond according to the situation. In addition, students develop the ability to cope appropriately while obtaining necessary information in the many situations expected when traveling in regions where Japanese is used. Furthermore, students use short, coherent written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. Even when vocabulary is limited, they aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their ideas by devising paraphrases and to take part in exchanges and discussions on familiar topics. To this end, the course comprehensively develops the five skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, while students learn frequently used expressions and phrases and the conventions of Japanese etiquette, with the aim of building a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used appropriately in real life.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese2B, Japanese2C, Japanese2D, Practical Japanese D-F, etc.).
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・Students can understand concise texts centered on factual information within their own field of specialization or range of interest. ・Students can skim and scan long texts to find the information needed to perform a task, and can gather information from different parts of a text or from several texts. ・They can also survey straightforward, fact-based texts in magazines, brochures, and on the web, and judge their content and practical usefulness. ・They can understand the viewpoints and opinions presented in simple explanatory texts of fact related to their own interests or fields of study, and in short texts on familiar topics. ・For argumentative texts with a clear claim, they can grasp the main conclusions and the general line of argument. Furthermore, by attending to connectives expressing number, time, and logical relations, and to the role of paragraphs, students can understand the argumentation of a text more deeply. They can infer the meaning of parts of a text from its overall flow and, in areas of interest or familiar topics, infer the meaning of unknown words and expressions from context in order to understand the meaning of a sentence.
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams	Japanese-Language Proficiency Test (JLPT), each level: Students aim to pass the December examination. ＊Details of the target level will be announced in each class.
Method of Feedback	Feedback on incorrect answers and similar matters will be given for quizzes and homework.

Grade	G1	Teaching Method	Lecture (On-demand)
Course Category	Faculty of International Studies Specialized Courses
Theme	In addition to everyday life and familiar social topics, students can convey their views and positions, with reasons and explanations, in a coherent manner using relatively natural and clear expressions, even on somewhat abstract content.
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the ability to understand the main points of familiar topics encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese, and to respond according to the situation. In addition, students develop the ability to cope appropriately while obtaining necessary information in the many situations expected when traveling in regions where Japanese is used. Furthermore, students use short, coherent written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. Even when vocabulary is limited, they aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their ideas by devising paraphrases and to take part in exchanges and discussions on familiar topics. To this end, the course comprehensively develops the five skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, while students learn frequently used expressions and phrases and the conventions of Japanese etiquette, with the aim of building a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used appropriately in real life.

Learning Outcomes	・Students can understand concise texts centered on factual information within their own field of specialization or range of interest. ・Students can skim and scan long texts to find the information needed to perform a task, and can gather information from different parts of a text or from several texts. ・They can also survey straightforward, fact-based texts in magazines, brochures, and on the web, and judge their content and practical usefulness. ・They can understand the viewpoints and opinions presented in simple explanatory texts of fact related to their own interests or fields of study, and in short texts on familiar topics. ・For argumentative texts with a clear claim, they can grasp the main conclusions and the general line of argument. Furthermore, by attending to connectives expressing number, time, and logical relations, and to the role of paragraphs, students can understand the argumentation of a text more deeply. They can infer the meaning of parts of a text from its overall flow and, in areas of interest or familiar topics, infer the meaning of unknown words and expressions from context in order to understand the meaning of a sentence.

Learning Outcomes	・Students can understand concise texts centered on factual information within their own field of specialization or range of interest. ・Students can skim and scan long texts to find the information needed to perform a task, and can gather information from different parts of a text or from several texts. ・They can also survey straightforward, fact-based texts in magazines, brochures, and on the web, and judge their content and practical usefulness. ・They can understand the viewpoints and opinions presented in simple explanatory texts of fact related to their own interests or fields of study, and in short texts on familiar topics. ・For argumentative texts with a clear claim, they can grasp the main conclusions and the general line of argument. Furthermore, by attending to connectives expressing number, time, and logical relations, and to the role of paragraphs, students can understand the argumentation of a text more deeply. They can infer the meaning of parts of a text from its overall flow and, in areas of interest or familiar topics, infer the meaning of unknown words and expressions from context in order to understand the meaning of a sentence.

Theme	Using basic and somewhat linear expressions, students can convey their experiences and thoughts about everyday life and familiar social topics with a reasonable degree of coherence, in a manner that makes the main points clear.
Course Objectives and Overview	In this course, students concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese2A, Japanese2C, Japanese2D, Practical Japanese D-F, etc.), and through them aim to develop the ability to understand the main points of familiar topics encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese, and to respond according to the situation. In addition, students develop the ability to cope appropriately while obtaining necessary information in the many situations expected when traveling in regions where Japanese is used. Furthermore, students use short, coherent written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. Even when vocabulary is limited, they aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their ideas by devising paraphrases and to take part in exchanges and discussions on familiar topics. To this end, the course comprehensively develops the five skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, while students learn frequently used expressions and phrases and the conventions of Japanese etiquette, with the aim of building a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used appropriately in real life.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese2A, Japanese2C, Japanese2D, Practical Japanese D-F, etc.).

Theme	In addition to everyday life and familiar social topics, students can convey their views and positions, with reasons and explanations, in a coherent manner using relatively natural and clear expressions, even on somewhat abstract content.
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the ability to understand the main points of familiar topics encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese, and to respond according to the situation. In addition, students develop the ability to cope appropriately while obtaining necessary information in the many situations expected when traveling in regions where Japanese is used. Furthermore, students use short, coherent written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. Even when vocabulary is limited, they aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their ideas by devising paraphrases and to take part in exchanges and discussions on familiar topics. To this end, the course comprehensively develops the five skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, while students learn frequently used expressions and phrases and the conventions of Japanese etiquette, with the aim of building a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used appropriately in real life.

Learning Outcomes	・Students can understand concise texts centered on factual information within their own field of specialization or range of interest. ・Students can skim and scan long texts to find the information needed to perform a task, and can gather information from different parts of a text or from several texts. ・They can also survey straightforward, fact-based texts in magazines, brochures, and on the web, and judge their content and practical usefulness. ・They can understand the viewpoints and opinions presented in simple explanatory texts of fact related to their own interests or fields of study, and in short texts on familiar topics. ・For argumentative texts with a clear claim, they can grasp the main conclusions and the general line of argument. Furthermore, by attending to connectives expressing number, time, and logical relations, and to the role of paragraphs, students can understand the argumentation of a text more deeply. They can infer the meaning of parts of a text from its overall flow and, in areas of interest or familiar topics, infer the meaning of unknown words and expressions from context in order to understand the meaning of a sentence.

Theme	Using basic and somewhat linear expressions, students can convey their experiences and thoughts about everyday life and familiar social topics with a reasonable degree of coherence, in a manner that makes the main points clear.
Course Objectives and Overview	In this course, students concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese2A, Japanese2B, Japanese2D, Practical Japanese D-F, etc.), and through them aim to develop the ability to understand the main points of familiar topics encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese, and to respond according to the situation. In addition, students develop the ability to cope appropriately while obtaining necessary information in the many situations expected when traveling in regions where Japanese is used. Furthermore, students use short, coherent written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. Even when vocabulary is limited, they aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their ideas by devising paraphrases and to take part in exchanges and discussions on familiar topics. To this end, the course comprehensively develops the five skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, while students learn frequently used expressions and phrases and the conventions of Japanese etiquette, with the aim of building a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used appropriately in real life.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese2A, Japanese2B, Japanese2D, Practical Japanese D-F, etc.).
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・Students have acquired a range of linguistic expression that allows them to explain the main points of ideas and problems with a fair degree of accuracy, including in unexpected situations, and to express their views on abstract content and on cultural topics such as music and film. ・They can express themselves appropriately, using a relatively wide vocabulary, on familiar topics and on many topics related to daily life. ・They can communicate with generally sound accuracy in familiar situations. ・Although errors attributable to the influence of the first language may appear, they can clearly convey the content they intend.
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams	Japanese-Language Proficiency Test (JLPT), each level: Students aim to pass the December examination. ＊Details of the target level will be announced in each class.
Method of Feedback	Feedback on incorrect answers and similar matters will be given for quizzes and homework.

Theme	In addition to everyday life and familiar social topics, students can convey their views and positions, with reasons and explanations, in a coherent manner using relatively natural and clear expressions, even on somewhat abstract content.
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the ability to understand the main points of familiar topics encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese, and to respond according to the situation. In addition, students develop the ability to cope appropriately while obtaining necessary information in the many situations expected when traveling in regions where Japanese is used. Furthermore, students use short, coherent written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. Even when vocabulary is limited, they aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their ideas by devising paraphrases and to take part in exchanges and discussions on familiar topics. To this end, the course comprehensively develops the five skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, while students learn frequently used expressions and phrases and the conventions of Japanese etiquette, with the aim of building a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used appropriately in real life.

Course Numbering	For course numbering, please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/numbering.html	Credits	1 Credit
Grade	G1	Teaching Method	Lecture
Course Category	Faculty of International Studies Specialized Courses
Theme	Using basic and somewhat linear expressions, students can convey their experiences and thoughts about everyday life and familiar social topics with a reasonable degree of coherence, in a manner that makes the main points clear.
Course Objectives and Overview	In this course, students concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese2A, Japanese2B, Japanese2C, Practical Japanese D-F, etc.), and through them aim to develop the ability to understand the main points of familiar topics encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese, and to respond according to the situation. In addition, students develop the ability to cope appropriately while obtaining necessary information in the many situations expected when traveling in regions where Japanese is used. Furthermore, students use short, coherent written and spoken texts on familiar matters of personal interest to explain experiences, events, hopes for the future, and plans, and to state opinions and reasons concisely. Even when vocabulary is limited, they aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their ideas by devising paraphrases and to take part in exchanges and discussions on familiar topics. To this end, the course comprehensively develops the five skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, while students learn frequently used expressions and phrases and the conventions of Japanese etiquette, with the aim of building a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used appropriately in real life.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese2A, Japanese2B, Japanese2C, Practical Japanese D-F, etc.).
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・Students can understand simple factual information on everyday and routine work-related topics. When spoken clearly in standard speech or a familiar variety of the language, students can understand everything from general messages to specific content. ・Moreover, they can understand the content of lectures and talks in their own field of specialization when given as short presentations with a simple structure on familiar themes.
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams	Japanese-Language Proficiency Test (JLPT), each level: Students aim to pass the December examination. ＊Details of the target level will be announced in each class.
Method of Feedback	Feedback on incorrect answers and similar matters will be given for quizzes and homework.

Theme	In addition to everyday life and familiar social topics, students can convey their views and positions, with reasons and explanations, in a coherent manner using relatively natural and clear expressions, even on somewhat abstract content.
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the ability to understand the main points of familiar topics encountered in daily life—such as work, school, and leisure—when expressed in standard Japanese, and to respond according to the situation. In addition, students develop the ability to cope appropriately while obtaining necessary information in the many situations expected when traveling in regions where Japanese is used. Even when vocabulary is limited, they aim to acquire the expressive ability to convey their ideas by devising paraphrases and to take part in exchanges and discussions on familiar topics. To this end, the course comprehensively develops the five skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, while students learn frequently used expressions and phrases and the conventions of Japanese etiquette, with the aim of building a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used appropriately in real life.

Theme	Students can express their opinions and ideas fairly fluently on a wide range of concrete and abstract topics, organizing the main points clearly, and can handle interaction with others without difficulty
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main points of somewhat complex texts on topics ranging from the abstract to the concrete, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to cultivate the practical ability to interact relatively fluently and naturally with native speakers without tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear texts and utterances of a certain length on a wide range of topics and to explain their own views and positions logically while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. In speaking, students aim to acquire the ability to express themselves at a relatively steady pace while avoiding errors that cause misunderstanding and, through effort, to develop the ability to understand and take part in group discussions even when the speech is fast and colloquial. To this end, the class engages in learning activities that comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and enhances students' command of more advanced and varied expressions, vocabulary, and grammar. In this way, it builds a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in specialized university study and in future research and work settings.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese3B, Japanese3C, Japanese3D).

Learning Outcomes	・Students can read and interpret texts largely on their own, selecting and using appropriate reference materials and adjusting their reading style and speed to the purpose and type of text. ・They have a broad vocabulary; although they may have some difficulty with low-frequency idiomatic expressions, their comprehension is not seriously impeded. ・In addition, they can skim long and complex texts to identify useful information and judge whether a text is worth reading closely. ・They can read news, articles, and reports on a wide range of specialized topics and grasp their content and importance. ・Furthermore, they can understand articles and reports on contemporary issues written from a particular standpoint or perspective, and can distinguish whether a text is intended to provide facts or to persuade the reader. ・They can recognize differences in the structure of argumentative texts—such as contrast, problem and solution, and cause and effect—and deepen their understanding by using various reading strategies, such as attending to the main points and drawing on contextual cues.

Theme	Students can express their opinions and ideas fairly fluently on a wide range of concrete and abstract topics, organizing the main points clearly, and can handle interaction with others without difficulty
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main points of somewhat complex texts on topics ranging from the abstract to the concrete, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to cultivate the practical ability to interact relatively fluently and naturally with native speakers without tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear texts and utterances of a certain length on a wide range of topics and to explain their own views and positions logically while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. In speaking, students aim to acquire the ability to express themselves at a relatively steady pace while avoiding errors that cause misunderstanding and, through effort, to develop the ability to understand and take part in group discussions even when the speech is fast and colloquial. To this end, the class engages in learning activities that comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and enhances students' command of more advanced and varied expressions, vocabulary, and grammar. In this way, it builds a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in specialized university study and in future research and work settings.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese3B, Japanese3C, Japanese3D).
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・Students can read and interpret texts largely on their own, selecting and using appropriate reference materials and adjusting their reading style and speed to the purpose and type of text. ・They have a broad vocabulary; although they may have some difficulty with low-frequency idiomatic expressions, their comprehension is not seriously impeded. ・In addition, they can skim long and complex texts to identify useful information and judge whether a text is worth reading closely. ・They can read news, articles, and reports on a wide range of specialized topics and grasp their content and importance. ・Furthermore, they can understand articles and reports on contemporary issues written from a particular standpoint or perspective, and can distinguish whether a text is intended to provide facts or to persuade the reader. ・They can recognize differences in the structure of argumentative texts—such as contrast, problem and solution, and cause and effect—and deepen their understanding by using various reading strategies, such as attending to the main points and drawing on contextual cues.
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams	Japanese-Language Proficiency Test (JLPT), each level: Students aim to pass the July examination. ＊Details of the target level will be announced in each class.

Theme	Students can express their opinions and ideas fairly fluently on a wide range of concrete and abstract topics, organizing the main points clearly, and can handle interaction with others without difficulty
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main points of somewhat complex texts on topics ranging from the abstract to the concrete, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to cultivate the practical ability to interact relatively fluently and naturally with native speakers without tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear texts and utterances of a certain length on a wide range of topics and to explain their own views and positions logically while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. In speaking, students aim to acquire the ability to express themselves at a relatively steady pace while avoiding errors that cause misunderstanding and, through effort, to develop the ability to understand and take part in group discussions even when the speech is fast and colloquial. To this end, the class engages in learning activities that comprehensively develop the five skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and enhances students' command of more advanced and varied expressions, vocabulary, and grammar. In this way, it builds a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in specialized university study and in future research and work settings.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese3A, Japanese3C, Japanese3D).

Grade	G2	Teaching Method	Lecture
Course Category	Faculty of International Studies Specialized Courses
Theme	Students can express their opinions and ideas fairly fluently on a wide range of concrete and abstract topics, organizing the main points clearly, and can handle interaction with others without difficulty
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main points of somewhat complex texts on topics ranging from the abstract to the concrete, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to cultivate the practical ability to interact relatively fluently and naturally with native speakers without tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear texts and utterances of a certain length on a wide range of topics and to explain their own views and positions logically while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. In speaking, students aim to acquire the ability to express themselves at a relatively steady pace while avoiding errors that cause misunderstanding and, through effort, to develop the ability to understand and take part in group discussions even when the speech is fast and colloquial. To this end, the class engages in learning activities that comprehensively develop the five skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and enhances students' command of more advanced and varied expressions, vocabulary, and grammar. In this way, it builds a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in specialized university study and in future research and work settings.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese3A, Japanese3C, Japanese3D).
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・Students can read and interpret texts largely on their own, selecting and using appropriate reference materials and adjusting their reading style and speed to the purpose and type of text. ・They have a broad vocabulary; although they may have some difficulty with low-frequency idiomatic expressions, their comprehension is not seriously impeded. ・In addition, they can skim long and complex texts to identify useful information and judge whether a text is worth reading closely. ・They can read news, articles, and reports on a wide range of specialized topics and grasp their content and importance. ・Furthermore, they can understand articles and reports on contemporary issues written from a particular standpoint or perspective, and can distinguish whether a text is intended to provide facts or to persuade the reader. ・They can recognize differences in the structure of argumentative texts—such as contrast, problem and solution, and cause and effect—and deepen their understanding by using various reading strategies, such as attending to the main points and drawing on contextual cues.
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams	Japanese-Language Proficiency Test (JLPT), each level: Students aim to pass the July examination. ＊Details of the target level will be announced in each class.

To this end, the class engages in learning activities that comprehensively develop the five skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and enhances students' command of more advanced and varied expressions, vocabulary, and grammar. In this way, it builds a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in specialized university study and in future research and work settings.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese3A, Japanese3C, Japanese3D).

Learning Outcomes	・Students can read and interpret texts largely on their own, selecting and using appropriate reference materials and adjusting their reading style and speed to the purpose and type of text. ・They have a broad vocabulary; although they may have some difficulty with low-frequency idiomatic expressions, their comprehension is not seriously impeded. ・In addition, they can skim long and complex texts to identify useful information and judge whether a text is worth reading closely. ・They can read news, articles, and reports on a wide range of specialized topics and grasp their content and importance. ・Furthermore, they can understand articles and reports on contemporary issues written from a particular standpoint or perspective, and can distinguish whether a text is intended to provide facts or to persuade the reader. ・They can recognize differences in the structure of argumentative texts—such as contrast, problem and solution, and cause and effect—and deepen their understanding by using various reading strategies, such as attending to the main points and drawing on contextual cues.

Theme	Students can express their opinions and ideas fairly fluently on a wide range of concrete and abstract topics, organizing the main points clearly, and can handle interaction with others without difficulty
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main points of somewhat complex texts on topics ranging from the abstract to the concrete, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to cultivate the practical ability to interact relatively fluently and naturally with native speakers without tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear texts and utterances of a certain length on a wide range of topics and to explain their own views and positions logically while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. In speaking, students aim to acquire the ability to express themselves at a relatively steady pace while avoiding errors that cause misunderstanding and, through effort, to develop the ability to understand and take part in group discussions even when the speech is fast and colloquial. To this end, the class engages in learning activities that comprehensively develop the five skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and enhances students' command of more advanced and varied expressions, vocabulary, and grammar. In this way, it builds a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in specialized university study and in future research and work settings.

Theme	Students can express their opinions and ideas fairly fluently on a wide range of concrete and abstract topics, organizing the main points clearly, and can handle interaction with others without difficulty
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main points of somewhat complex texts on topics ranging from the abstract to the concrete, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to cultivate the practical ability to interact relatively fluently and naturally with native speakers without tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear texts and utterances of a certain length on a wide range of topics and to explain their own views and positions logically while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. In speaking, students aim to acquire the ability to express themselves at a relatively steady pace while avoiding errors that cause misunderstanding and, through effort, to develop the ability to understand and take part in group discussions even when the speech is fast and colloquial. To this end, the class engages in learning activities that comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and enhances students' command of more advanced and varied expressions, vocabulary, and grammar. In this way, it builds a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in specialized university study and in future research and work settings.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese3A, Japanese3B, Japanese3D)
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・Students have a range of linguistic expression sufficient to give clear descriptions, state their own viewpoints, and structure an argument without giving the impression of searching for words. ・They can use a broad vocabulary on their own field of specialization and on many general topics and, although they may hesitate because of gaps in vocabulary, can cope by rephrasing. ・They use vocabulary with appropriate collocations in many contexts and can generally understand and use the vocabulary of their field of specialization. ・Their grammatical command is relatively high; in addition to simple structures, they can use some complex structures, and although some inaccuracies appear, they can express themselves without impeding comprehension.
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams	Japanese-Language Proficiency Test (JLPT), each level: Students aim to pass the July examination. ＊Details of the target level will be announced in each class.

Theme	Students can express their opinions and ideas fairly fluently on a wide range of concrete and abstract topics, organizing the main points clearly, and can handle interaction with others without difficulty
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main points of somewhat complex texts on topics ranging from the abstract to the concrete, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to cultivate the practical ability to interact relatively fluently and naturally with native speakers without tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear texts and utterances of a certain length on a wide range of topics and to explain their own views and positions logically while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. In speaking, students aim to acquire the ability to express themselves at a relatively steady pace while avoiding errors that cause misunderstanding and, through effort, to develop the ability to understand and take part in group discussions even when the speech is fast and colloquial. To this end, the class engages in learning activities that comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and enhances students' command of more advanced and varied expressions, vocabulary, and grammar. In this way, it builds a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in specialized university study and in future research and work settings.

Theme	Students can express their opinions and ideas fairly fluently on a wide range of concrete and abstract topics, organizing the main points clearly, and can handle interaction with others without difficulty
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main points of somewhat complex texts on topics ranging from the abstract to the concrete, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to cultivate the practical ability to interact relatively fluently and naturally with native speakers without tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear texts and utterances of a certain length on a wide range of topics and to explain their own views and positions logically while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. In speaking, students aim to acquire the ability to express themselves at a relatively steady pace while avoiding errors that cause misunderstanding and, through effort, to develop the ability to understand and take part in group discussions even when the speech is fast and colloquial. To this end, the class engages in learning activities that comprehensively develop the five skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, and enhances students' command of more advanced and varied expressions, vocabulary, and grammar. In this way, it builds a foundation of Japanese-language proficiency that can be used in specialized university study and in future research and work settings.
Prerequisites and Notes	Students must concurrently take other Japanese-language courses (Japanese3A, Japanese3B, Japanese3C).
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・Students can understand speech in standard language or a familiar variety of the language, not only in forms such as live or broadcast speech and on familiar topics, but also on topics usually dealt with in personal, social, academic, and professional settings. ・Unless there is extreme noise or the structure of the discourse is unclear, they can grasp the content of what is said. In addition, they can follow lively conversation among speakers of the target language and understand the main points of lectures, talks, and specialized presentations that are complex in content and language. ・Furthermore, on topics in their own areas of interest or specialization, they can understand the speaker's viewpoint.
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams	Japanese-Language Proficiency Test (JLPT), each level: Students aim to pass the July examination. ＊Details of the target level will be announced in each class.

Theme	Students can state their own positions fluently and naturally, with awareness of the points at issue and the structure of the argument, on diverse and complex topics including those in their field of specialization, and can use language flexibly in interaction
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main content of complex texts on abstract and concrete topics, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to acquire the practical ability to interact fluently and naturally, even with native speakers, without undue tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear and detailed texts and utterances on a wide range of topics and to explain their own perspectives and ideas accurately while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. They cultivate the ability to compensate for gaps in vocabulary through paraphrasing and to express themselves without noticeable awkwardness, and aim to acquire the ability to adjust content, structure, and manner of speaking to the situation and the listener so as to keep speaking smoothly. To this end, through learning activities that comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, the class cultivates advanced and flexible expressive and dialogic ability, aiming to build a foundation for using Japanese independently in specialized study and in discussion.

Theme	Students can state their own positions fluently and naturally, with awareness of the points at issue and the structure of the argument, on diverse and complex topics including those in their field of specialization, and can use language flexibly in interaction
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main content of complex texts on abstract and concrete topics, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to acquire the practical ability to interact fluently and naturally, even with native speakers, without undue tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear and detailed texts and utterances on a wide range of topics and to explain their own perspectives and ideas accurately while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. They cultivate the ability to compensate for gaps in vocabulary through paraphrasing and to express themselves without noticeable awkwardness, and aim to acquire the ability to adjust content, structure, and manner of speaking to the situation and the listener so as to keep speaking smoothly. To this end, through learning activities that comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, the class cultivates advanced and flexible expressive and dialogic ability, aiming to build a foundation for using Japanese independently in specialized study and in discussion.

Theme	Students can state their own positions fluently and naturally, with awareness of the points at issue and the structure of the argument, on diverse and complex topics including those in their field of specialization, and can use language flexibly in interaction
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main content of complex texts on abstract and concrete topics, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to acquire the practical ability to interact fluently and naturally, even with native speakers, without undue tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear and detailed texts and utterances on a wide range of topics and to explain their own perspectives and ideas accurately while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. They cultivate the ability to compensate for gaps in vocabulary through paraphrasing and to express themselves without noticeable awkwardness, and aim to acquire the ability to adjust content, structure, and manner of speaking to the situation and the listener so as to keep speaking smoothly. To this end, through learning activities that comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, the class cultivates advanced and flexible expressive and dialogic ability, aiming to build a foundation for using Japanese independently in specialized study and in discussion.

Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main content of complex texts on abstract and concrete topics, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to acquire the practical ability to interact fluently and naturally, even with native speakers, without undue tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear and detailed texts and utterances on a wide range of topics and to explain their own perspectives and ideas accurately while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. They cultivate the ability to compensate for gaps in vocabulary through paraphrasing and to express themselves without noticeable awkwardness, and aim to acquire the ability to adjust content, structure, and manner of speaking to the situation and the listener so as to keep speaking smoothly. To this end, through learning activities that comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, the class cultivates advanced and flexible expressive and dialogic ability, aiming to build a foundation for using Japanese independently in specialized study and in discussion.

Theme	Students can state their own positions fluently and naturally, with awareness of the points at issue and the structure of the argument, on diverse and complex topics including those in their field of specialization, and can use language flexibly in interaction
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main content of complex texts on abstract and concrete topics, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to acquire the practical ability to interact fluently and naturally, even with native speakers, without undue tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear and detailed texts and utterances on a wide range of topics and to explain their own perspectives and ideas accurately while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. They cultivate the ability to compensate for gaps in vocabulary through paraphrasing and to express themselves without noticeable awkwardness, and aim to acquire the ability to adjust content, structure, and manner of speaking to the situation and the listener so as to keep speaking smoothly. To this end, through learning activities that comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, the class cultivates advanced and flexible expressive and dialogic ability, aiming to build a foundation for using Japanese independently in specialized study and in discussion.

Theme	Students can state their own positions fluently and naturally, with awareness of the points at issue and the structure of the argument, on diverse and complex topics including those in their field of specialization, and can use language flexibly in interaction
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main content of complex texts on abstract and concrete topics, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to acquire the practical ability to interact fluently and naturally, even with native speakers, without undue tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear and detailed texts and utterances on a wide range of topics and to explain their own perspectives and ideas accurately while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. They cultivate the ability to compensate for gaps in vocabulary through paraphrasing and to express themselves without noticeable awkwardness, and aim to acquire the ability to adjust content, structure, and manner of speaking to the situation and the listener so as to keep speaking smoothly. To this end, through learning activities that comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, the class cultivates advanced and flexible expressive and dialogic ability, aiming to build a foundation for using Japanese independently in specialized study and in discussion.

Theme	Students can state their own positions fluently and naturally, with awareness of the points at issue and the structure of the argument, on diverse and complex topics including those in their field of specialization, and can use language flexibly in interaction
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop the Japanese-language ability to understand the main content of complex texts on abstract and concrete topics, including technical discussions related to one's own field of specialization. A further goal is to acquire the practical ability to interact fluently and naturally, even with native speakers, without undue tension. In addition, students learn to produce clear and detailed texts and utterances on a wide range of topics and to explain their own perspectives and ideas accurately while presenting the advantages and disadvantages of multiple options. They cultivate the ability to compensate for gaps in vocabulary through paraphrasing and to express themselves without noticeable awkwardness, and aim to acquire the ability to adjust content, structure, and manner of speaking to the situation and the listener so as to keep speaking smoothly. To this end, through learning activities that comprehensively develop the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking, the class cultivates advanced and flexible expressive and dialogic ability, aiming to build a foundation for using Japanese independently in specialized study and in discussion.

Theme	Acquire the basic perspectives of international studies needed for the multidisciplinary, integrated learning in the Faculty of International Studies.
Course Objectives and Overview	Introduction to International Studies aims to help students acquire the basic perspectives of international studies needed for the multidisciplinary, integrated learning in the Faculty of International Studies. Students of the Faculty of International Studies foster intercultural understanding and multicultural coexistence, acquire a rich international sensibility and excellent communication skills, and, equipped with broad learning and expertise, aim to become professionals who can be active in international society. Centered on “intercultural understanding,” the course sets as its themes “international studies,” “international society,” “international population movement,” “multicultural society,” and “international co-learning,” and students learn about these themes through concrete cases. Through this learning, students not only gain the fields of study and perspectives that make up the courses to be selected in the second year (English Communication, International Culture, International Society), but also cultivate the basic ideas of international studies and the intercultural understanding and international understanding that international studies requires.
Prerequisites and Notes	Introduction to International Studies, in which students acquire the basic perspectives for learning in the Faculty of International Studies, is a required course taken by all students in the first year. Introduction to International Studies is the foundational course for the three courses that begin in the second year: ① the English Communication Course,②the International Culture Course, and ③ the International Society Course. It is an important course for acquiring the intercultural understanding and international understanding needed to master communication, international society, international culture, international politics, international economics, and global business. In order to acquire the ability to grasp global issues and the issues of each country and region and to work toward solving them, please participate actively in the class content and group work conducted in every class, and complete the confirmation tests that consolidate learning for each session and the out-of-class assignments.

Theme	Acquire the basic perspectives of international studies needed for the multidisciplinary, integrated learning in the Faculty of International Studies.
Course Objectives and Overview	This course is a repeat-enrollment course for Introduction to International Studies. Introduction to International Studies aims to help students acquire the basic perspectives of international studies needed for the multidisciplinary, integrated learning in the Faculty of International Studies. Students of the Faculty of International Studies foster intercultural understanding and multicultural coexistence, acquire a rich international sensibility and excellent communication skills, and, equipped with broad learning and expertise, aim to become professionals who can be active in international society. Centered on “intercultural understanding,” the course sets as its themes “international studies,” “international society,” “international population movement,” “multicultural society,” and “international co-learning,” and students learn about these themes through concrete cases. Through this learning, students not only gain the fields of study and perspectives that make up the courses to be selected in the second year (English Communication, International Culture, International Society), but also cultivate the basic ideas of international studies and the intercultural understanding and international understanding that international studies requires.
Prerequisites and Notes	Introduction to International Studies, in which students acquire the basic perspectives for learning in the Faculty of International Studies, is a required course taken by all students in the first year. This course is for repeat enrollment. Introduction to International Studies is the foundational course for the three courses that begin in the second year: ① the English Communication Course, ②the International Culture Course, and ③ the International Society Course. It is an important course for acquiring the intercultural understanding and international understanding needed to master communication, international society, international culture, international politics, international economics, and global business. In order to acquire the ability to grasp global issues and the issues of each country and region and to work toward solving them, please participate actively in the class content and group work conducted in every class, and complete the confirmation tests that consolidate learning for each session and the out-of-class assignments.
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	Introduction to International Studies aims to help students acquire the basic perspectives of international studies needed for the multidisciplinary, integrated learning in the Faculty of International Studies. ・Students can understand what international studies is and what culture is. ・Students can acquire basic knowledge about countries and regions with different cultural backgrounds and understand differences in people’s values and customs. ・By understanding the differences in the cultures and societies of countries and regions, students can reexamine themselves. ・Through group work among students from different backgrounds, students can develop an attitude of collaboration and an orientation toward a multicultural society. ・Students can understand the basics of the “perspectives” and “methods” for viewing the world offered by the three courses of English Communication, International Culture, and International Society.

Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams
Method of Feedback	・Feedback is given in class on the results of the confirmation tests taken outside class for each session, which are administered using the online test function. ・In every class, questions and answers from participants regarding the content of the previous on-demand class are held. ・As necessary, additional materials are distributed and literature is introduced.

Theme	Students acquire basic knowledge and skills in information processing and ICT, and develop information literacy (the ability to utilize information).
Course Objectives and Overview	・The purpose of this course is to acquire basic knowledge and skills in information processing and ICT (information and communication technology), and information literacy (the ability to utilize information). These abilities are “generic skills” that form the foundation of university life and can be called the “employability” that is essential in work after graduation. For example, at university students investigate a specific theme, write a report, and then give a presentation. Moreover, in today’s information society, ICT is used in every setting, and its use is required. ・In this course, students become accustomed to basic PC operation and acquire the fundamentals of “how to use” (operational knowledge and skills) the basic software most used in university life and business settings, such as word-processing, spreadsheet, and presentation software. They also learn about the university’s academic affairs system, the use of related SNS (social networking services), cloud services, and e-mail services, methods of searching for information using the library information system and the Internet, computers, information and communication networks, and information morals and information security (content covered in the IT Passport examination).
Prerequisites and Notes	Bring your PC to every class.
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・The goal of this course is to acquire the basic knowledge and skills in ICT (information and communication technology) and information processing, and the information literacy (ability to utilize information), that are the minimum required during the four years of university and upon joining a company. Specifically, the following items are the attainment goals. 1) Operate a PC and appropriately use the university’s academic affairs system and related SNS and cloud services. 2) Conduct appropriate information searches using the Internet (including how to use the library, literature searching, and use of databases). 3) Explain information morals, information security, personal information, copyright, and related matters in light of the characteristics of the information society. 4) Enter text using the keyboard (at least 300 Japanese characters in five minutes). 5) Create simple slide materials using presentation software (PowerPoint). 6) Create simple documents using word-processing software (Word). 7) Create simple summary tables and graphs for analyzing, evaluating, and organizing information using spreadsheet software (Excel).
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams
Method of Feedback	・Because practical exercises using PCs are conducted, student questions and the like will be answered as appropriate. ・When tests using the academic affairs system are conducted, the scoring results and the like will be fed back after the test.

Regarding taking this course	By attending every class and working on the assignments, students can acquire basic operating skills in PCs, typing, and word-processing, spreadsheet, and presentation software. Acquiring these skills requires a certain amount of time and practice. Because they are essential skills not only for the four years of university life but also for work after graduation, please work on them with concentration.

Course Title	Data Science Basics	Academic Year	Spring Semester, AY2026
Instructor	MIYAZAKI Yutaka	Year Level	1234
Course Numbering	For course numbering, please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/numbering.html	Credits	2 Credits
Grade	G1	Teaching Method	Lecture
Course Category	Faculty of International Studies Specialized Courses
Theme	In accordance with the model curriculum for the “Mathematics, Data Science, and AI Education Program (Literacy Level),” students learn the fundamentals of data processing and statistical analysis using spreadsheet software.
Course Objectives and Overview	・The purpose of this course is to heighten students’ interest in mathematics, data science, and AI, and to develop the basic ability to understand mathematics, data science, and AI appropriately and to make use of them. ・Literacy in mathematics, data science, and AI is a “generic skill” necessary for realizing Society 5.0 and achieving the SDGs, and can also be called the “employability” needed in work after graduation. ・Basic knowledge and skills in mathematics, data science, and AI are also essential for understanding the legal nature of data and AI, tackling the issues of modern business, and developing the ability to be active in society. ・In this course, students work on assignments while operating various office applications in order to acquire these abilities in mathematics, data science, and AI. In addition, for practical learning that makes use of real issues and real data in society, real issues and real data provided by companies and other organizations are used. ・Students will also learn about laws, regulations, and ethics relating to the handling of information, including information ethics and information security (content covered in the IT Passport examination). ・This course conforms to the “Mathematics, Data Science, and AI (Literacy Level) Model Curriculum.”
Prerequisites and Notes	Bring your PC to every class.
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	The goal of this course is to acquire abilities in mathematics, data science, and AI. Specifically, the following items are the attainment goals. 1) Be able to explain changes occurring in society, data used in society, fields of application of data and AI, the sites where data and AI are used, and the latest trends in the use of data and AI. 2) Be able to read, explain, and handle data. 3) Be able to explain points to be noted in handling data and AI and in protecting data, and the laws, regulations, and ethics relating to the handling of information, including information ethics and information security. 4) Be able to use real data provided by companies and other organizations to process and analyze the data and prepare report materials that contribute to solving real problems.
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams
Method of Feedback	・Because practical exercises using PCs are conducted, student questions and the like will be answered as appropriate. ・When tests using the academic affairs system are conducted, the scoring results and

Theme	In accordance with the model curriculum for the “Mathematics, Data Science, and AI Education Program (Literacy Level),” students learn the fundamentals of data processing and statistical analysis using spreadsheet software.
Course Objectives and Overview	・The purpose of this course is to heighten students’ interest in mathematics, data science, and AI, and to develop the basic ability to understand mathematics, data science, and AI appropriately and to make use of them. ・Literacy in mathematics, data science, and AI is a “generic skill” necessary for realizing Society 5.0 and achieving the SDGs, and can also be called the “employability” needed in work after graduation. ・Basic knowledge and skills in mathematics, data science, and AI are also essential for understanding the legal nature of data and AI, tackling the issues of modern business, and developing the ability to be active in society. ・In this course, students work on assignments while operating various office applications in order to acquire these abilities in mathematics, data science, and AI. In addition, for practical learning that makes use of real issues and real data in society, real issues and real data provided by companies and other organizations are used. ・Students will also learn about laws, regulations, and ethics relating to the handling of information, including information ethics and information security (content covered in the IT Passport examination). ・This course conforms to the “Mathematics, Data Science, and AI (Literacy Level) Model Curriculum.”

Course Objectives and Overview	This course comprehensively strengthens the four skills of English and aims to raise TOEIC® Listening & Reading (L&R) test scores to the 400s. In class, students solidify their foundations by mastering vocabulary frequently tested on the TOEIC and reviewing important grammar points, and improve their practical skills through English reading comprehension and listening practice of the kind that appears on the actual TOEIC. In addition, quizzes in every class, TOEIC-format practice questions, and mock examinations are administered to check regularly how well the content has been retained. This enables students to gauge their level of understanding and to reinforce their weak points early. Because raising TOEIC scores requires sustained effort, guidance on TOEIC study methods is also provided in class to support autonomous learning and continued score improvement.
Prerequisites and Notes	<Students of the Faculty of International Studies> Classes are assigned on the basis of the English placement test taken at the time of admission or past TOEIC L&R scores, and pre-registration is carried out. Because the classes are organized by proficiency level, students who have not been pre-registered but wish to take this course should select and register for the class that matches their own level of English. If you are unsure about class selection, please consult the instructor in charge of the seminar. <International Students> International students aiming to improve their TOEIC scores are encouraged to enroll. Class ① is the Advanced class (advanced level). Please refer to the guideline scores below and select and register for the class that matches your own level of English. <Students of the Faculties of Economics, Business Administration, and Law> Registration is possible within the quota of several students per class. Students who wish to take this course should refer to the guideline scores below and select and register for the class that matches their own level of English. ◆ Class assignment: guideline TOEIC scores / English placement test scores Class 1: English placement test score of 40 or above Class 2: English placement test score of 35-39 Class 3: English placement test score of 30-34 Class 4: English placement test score below 30 Class ① (Mon. Regarding taking this course	Students enrolled in this course are expected to engage in approximately 4 hours of self-study per week (review of class content, quizzes, work on assignments, and preparation) in order to improve their TOEIC scores and achieve the goals they set for themselves.

Class Session	Class Format	Class Plan	Preparation and Review (Preview/Review, etc.)	Preparation /Review Time
Session 1	In-person	Orientation and Course Overview * This course is organized into proficiency-level classes, and the textbook and the scope of study differ by class. Therefore, the specific class plan and study methods will be explained in the first class for each class. The content described in this syllabus is only a rough outline common to all classes. The purpose, attainment goals, evaluation methods, and conduct of the course are explained. An overview of the TOEIC test and how to proceed with self-study are introduced so that students can grasp the whole picture.	[Review] ・ Preparation in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 4 hours)	4 hours
Session 2	In-person	TOEIC Introduction and Introduction to Part 1 The overall structure of the TOEIC L&R test (Parts 1-7) and its question formats are outlined. Students understand the characteristics of Listening Part 1 (photograph description questions) and learn basic descriptions of the people and objects in photographs.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours
Session 3	In-person	Listening (Part 1) and Reading (Part 5: Grammar and Vocabulary Questions) Students strengthen the vocabulary and expressions required in Listening Part 1 and practice grasping situations quickly. Through the basic grammar and vocabulary questions in Reading Part 5, they become accustomed to selecting appropriate words and phrases and identifying parts of speech within short sentences. Theme	Solidify the foundations of English proficiency and aim to improve TOEIC® L&R scores.
Course Objectives and Overview	This course comprehensively strengthens the four skills of English and aims to raise TOEIC® Listening & Reading (L&R) test scores to the 400s. In class, students solidify their foundations by mastering vocabulary frequently tested on the TOEIC and reviewing important grammar points, and improve their practical skills through English reading comprehension and listening practice of the kind that appears on the actual TOEIC. In addition, quizzes in every class, TOEIC-format practice questions, and mock examinations are administered to check regularly how well the content has been retained. This enables students to gauge their level of understanding and to reinforce their weak points early. Because raising TOEIC scores requires sustained effort, guidance on TOEIC study methods is also provided in class to support autonomous learning and continued score improvement.
Prerequisites and Notes	<Students of the Faculty of International Studies> Classes are assigned on the basis of the English placement test taken at the time of admission or past TOEIC L&R scores, and pre-registration is carried out. Because the classes are organized by proficiency level, students who have not been pre-registered but wish to take this course should select and register for the class that matches their own level of English. If you are unsure about class selection, please consult the instructor in charge of the seminar. <International Students> International students aiming to improve their TOEIC scores are encouraged to enroll. Class ① is the Advanced class (advanced level). Please refer to the guideline scores below and select and register for the class that matches your own level of English. <Students of the Faculties of Economics, Business Administration, and Law> Registration is possible within the quota of several students per class. Students who wish to take this course should refer to the guideline scores below and select and register for the class that matches their own level of English. ◆ Class assignment: guideline TOEIC scores / English placement test scores Class 1: English placement test score of 40 or above Class 2: English placement test score of 35-39 Class 3: English placement test score of 30-34 Class 4: English placement test score below 30 Class ① (Mon. Theme	Solidify the foundations of English proficiency and aim to improve TOEIC® L&R scores.
Course Objectives and Overview	This course comprehensively strengthens the four skills of English and aims to raise TOEIC® Listening & Reading (L&R) test scores to the 400s. In class, students solidify their foundations by mastering vocabulary frequently tested on the TOEIC and reviewing important grammar points, and improve their practical skills through English reading comprehension and listening practice of the kind that appears on the actual TOEIC. In addition, quizzes in every class, TOEIC-format practice questions, and mock examinations are administered to check regularly how well the content has been retained. This enables students to gauge their level of understanding and to reinforce their weak points early. Because raising TOEIC scores requires sustained effort, guidance on TOEIC study methods is also provided in class to support autonomous learning and continued score improvement.
Prerequisites and Notes	<Students of the Faculty of International Studies> Classes are assigned on the basis of the English placement test taken at the time of admission or past TOEIC L&R scores, and pre-registration is carried out. Because the classes are organized by proficiency level, students who have not been pre-registered but wish to take this course should select and register for the class that matches their own level of English. If you are unsure about class selection, please consult the instructor in charge of the seminar. <International Students> International students aiming to improve their TOEIC scores are encouraged to enroll. Class ① is the Advanced class (advanced level). Please refer to the guideline scores below and select and register for the class that matches your own level of English. <Students of the Faculties of Economics, Business Administration, and Law> Registration is possible within the quota of several students per class. Students who wish to take this course should refer to the guideline scores below and select and register for the class that matches their own level of English. ◆ Class assignment: guideline TOEIC scores / English placement test scores Class 1: English placement test score of 40 or above Class 2: English placement test score of 35-39 Class 3: English placement test score of 30-34 Class 4: English placement test score below 30 Class ① (Mon. Period 3): International students' Advanced class (TOEIC 500 or above, or English placement test score of 40 or above) Class ② (Thu. Regarding taking this course	Students enrolled in this course are expected to engage in approximately 4 hours of self-study per week (review of class content, quizzes, work on assignments, and preparation) in order to improve their TOEIC scores and achieve the goals they set for themselves.

Class Session	Class Format	Class Plan	Preparation and Review (Preview/Review, etc.)	Preparation /Review Time
Session 1	In-person	Orientation and Course Overview * This course is organized into proficiency-level classes, and the textbook and the scope of study differ by class. Therefore, the specific class plan and study methods will be explained in the first class for each class. The content described in this syllabus is only a rough outline common to all classes. The purpose, attainment goals, evaluation methods, and conduct of the course are explained. An overview of the TOEIC test and how to proceed with self-study are introduced so that students can grasp the whole picture.	[Review] ・Preparation in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 4 hours)	4 hours
Session 2	In-person	TOEIC Introduction and Introduction to Part 1 The overall structure of the TOEIC L&R test (Parts 1-7) and its question formats are outlined. Students understand the characteristics of Listening Part 1 (photograph description questions) and learn basic descriptions of the people and objects in photographs.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours
Session 3	In-person	Listening (Part 1) and Reading (Part 5: Grammar and Vocabulary Questions) Students strengthen the vocabulary and expressions required in Listening Part 1 and practice grasping situations quickly. Through the basic grammar and vocabulary questions in Reading Part 5, they become accustomed to selecting appropriate words and phrases and identifying parts of speech within short sentences.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours

Session 4	In-person	Listening (Part 2) and Reading (Part 5: Grammar and Vocabulary Questions) Students understand the patterns of Listening Part 2 (question-response questions) and practice quickly linking questions to answers. They continue to review basic grammar items in Reading Part 5 (verb tenses, prepositions, conjunctions, etc.) and improve their speed and accuracy in answering.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours
Session 5	In-person	Listening (Part 2) and Reading (Part 5: Grammar and Vocabulary Questions) Students encounter a wider variety of question formats and vocabulary in Listening Part 2 and expand their listening range. By practicing Reading Part 5 repeatedly, they improve their speed of English processing and develop the ability to handle relatively difficult vocabulary and grammar questions.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours
Session 6	In-person	Listening (Part 2) and Reading (Part 5: Grammar and Vocabulary Questions) Students gauge how well they have mastered Listening Part 2 and aim to improve their rate of correct answers. They continue to build their grammar and vocabulary skills in Reading Part 5 and concentrate on overcoming areas of weakness.	[Review] Comprehensive review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 4 hours)	4 hours
Session 7	In-person	Midterm Test and Review of Material Covered So Far A midterm test is administered to measure students' understanding in the Listening and Reading parts.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours
Session 8	In-person	Listening (Part 3) and Reading (Part 6) Students understand the format and characteristics of Listening Part 3 (conversation questions) and practice quickly grasping the topic and intent of conversations. In Reading Part 6 (text completion questions), they develop the ability to complete a text with words and sentences appropriate to the context.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours
Session 9	In-person	Listening (Part 3) and Reading (Part 6) Students handle more complex conversations in Listening Part 3 and improve their ability to organize information. By practicing Reading Part 6 repeatedly, they become able to grasp the flow of the whole text and choose appropriate options.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours

Theme	Solidify the foundations of English proficiency and aim to improve TOEIC® L&R scores.
Course Objectives and Overview	This course comprehensively strengthens the four skills of English and aims to raise TOEIC® Listening & Reading (L&R) test scores to the 400s. In class, students solidify their foundations by mastering vocabulary frequently tested on the TOEIC and reviewing important grammar points, and improve their practical skills through English reading comprehension and listening practice of the kind that appears on the actual TOEIC. In addition, quizzes in every class, TOEIC-format practice questions, and mock examinations are administered to check regularly how well the content has been retained. This enables students to gauge their level of understanding and to reinforce their weak points early. Because raising TOEIC scores requires sustained effort, guidance on TOEIC study methods is also provided in class to support autonomous learning and continued score improvement.
Prerequisites and Notes	<Students of the Faculty of International Studies> Classes are assigned on the basis of the English placement test taken at the time of admission or past TOEIC L&R scores, and pre-registration is carried out. Because the classes are organized by proficiency level, students who have not been pre-registered but wish to take this course should select and register for the class that matches their own level of English. If you are unsure about class selection, please consult the instructor in charge of the seminar. <International Students> International students aiming to improve their TOEIC scores are encouraged to enroll. Class ① is the Advanced class (advanced level). Please refer to the guideline scores below and select and register for the class that matches your own level of English. <Students of the Faculties of Economics, Business Administration, and Law> Registration is possible within the quota of several students per class. Students who wish to take this course should refer to the guideline scores below and select and register for the class that matches their own level of English. ◆ Class assignment: guideline TOEIC scores / English placement test scores Class 1: English placement test score of 40 or above Class 2: English placement test score of 35-39 Class 3: English placement test score of 30-34 Class 4: English placement test score below 30 Class ① (Mon. Theme	Solidify the foundations of English proficiency and aim to improve TOEIC® L&R scores.
Course Objectives and Overview	This course comprehensively strengthens the four skills of English and aims to raise TOEIC® Listening & Reading (L&R) test scores to the 400s. In class, students solidify their foundations by mastering vocabulary frequently tested on the TOEIC and reviewing important grammar points, and improve their practical skills through English reading comprehension and listening practice of the kind that appears on the actual TOEIC. In addition, quizzes in every class, TOEIC-format practice questions, and mock examinations are administered to check regularly how well the content has been retained. This enables students to gauge their level of understanding and to reinforce their weak points early. Because raising TOEIC scores requires sustained effort, guidance on TOEIC study methods is also provided in class to support autonomous learning and continued score improvement.
Prerequisites and Notes	<Students of the Faculty of International Studies> Classes are assigned on the basis of the English placement test taken at the time of admission or past TOEIC L&R scores, and pre-registration is carried out. Because the classes are organized by proficiency level, students who have not been pre-registered but wish to take this course should select and register for the class that matches their own level of English. If you are unsure about class selection, please consult the instructor in charge of the seminar. <International Students> International students aiming to improve their TOEIC scores are encouraged to enroll. Class ① is the Advanced class (advanced level). Please refer to the guideline scores below and select and register for the class that matches your own level of English. <Students of the Faculties of Economics, Business Administration, and Law> Registration is possible within the quota of several students per class. Students who wish to take this course should refer to the guideline scores below and select and register for the class that matches their own level of English. ◆ Class assignment: guideline TOEIC scores / English placement test scores Class 1: English placement test score of 40 or above Class 2: English placement test score of 35-39 Class 3: English placement test score of 30-34 Class 4: English placement test score below 30 Class ① (Mon. Regarding taking this course	Students enrolled in this course are expected to engage in approximately 4 hours of self-study per week (review of class content, quizzes, work on assignments, and preparation) in order to improve their TOEIC scores and achieve the goals they set for themselves.

Class Session	Class Format	Class Plan	Preparation and Review (Preview/Review, etc.)	Preparation /Review Time
Session 1	In-person	Orientation and Course Overview * This course is organized into proficiency-level classes, and the textbook and the scope of study differ by class. Therefore, the specific class plan and study methods will be explained in the first class for each class. The content described in this syllabus is only a rough outline common to all classes. The purpose, attainment goals, evaluation methods, and conduct of the course are explained. An overview of the TOEIC test and how to proceed with self-study are introduced so that students can grasp the whole picture.	[Review] ・Preparation in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 4 hours)	4 hours
Session 2	In-person	TOEIC Introduction and Introduction to Part 1 The overall structure of the TOEIC L&R test (Parts 1-7) and its question formats are outlined. Students understand the characteristics of Listening Part 1 (photograph description questions) and learn basic descriptions of the people and objects in photographs.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours
Session 3	In-person	Listening (Part 1) and Reading (Part 5: Grammar and Vocabulary Questions) Students strengthen the vocabulary and expressions required in Listening Part 1 and practice grasping situations quickly. Through the basic grammar and vocabulary questions in Reading Part 5, they become accustomed to selecting appropriate words and phrases and identifying parts of speech within short sentences.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours

Session 4	In-person	Listening (Part 2) and Reading (Part 5: Grammar and Vocabulary Questions) Students understand the patterns of Listening Part 2 (question-response questions) and practice quickly linking questions to answers. They continue to review basic grammar items in Reading Part 5 (verb tenses, prepositions, conjunctions, etc.) and improve their speed and accuracy in answering.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours
Session 5	In-person	Listening (Part 2) and Reading (Part 5: Grammar and Vocabulary Questions) Students encounter a wider variety of question formats and vocabulary in Listening Part 2 and expand their listening range. By practicing Reading Part 5 repeatedly, they improve their speed of English processing and develop the ability to handle relatively difficult vocabulary and grammar questions.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours
Session 6	In-person	Listening (Part 2) and Reading (Part 5: Grammar and Vocabulary Questions) Students gauge how well they have mastered Listening Part 2 and aim to improve their rate of correct answers. They continue to build their grammar and vocabulary skills in Reading Part 5 and concentrate on overcoming areas of weakness.	[Review] Comprehensive review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 4 hours)	4 hours
Session 7	In-person	Midterm Test and Review of Material Covered So Far A midterm test is administered to measure students' understanding in the Listening and Reading parts.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours
Session 8	In-person	Listening (Part 3) and Reading (Part 6) Students understand the format and characteristics of Listening Part 3 (conversation questions) and practice quickly grasping the topic and intent of conversations. In Reading Part 6 (text completion questions), they develop the ability to complete a text with words and sentences appropriate to the context.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours
Session 9	In-person	Listening (Part 3) and Reading (Part 6) Students handle more complex conversations in Listening Part 3 and improve their ability to organize information. By practicing Reading Part 6 repeatedly, they become able to grasp the flow of the whole text and choose appropriate options.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours

0	son	7) In Listening Part 4 (talk questions), students practice understanding speeches and announcements and accurately extracting key information and main points. Using the short passages that form the basis of Reading Part 7 (reading comprehension questions), they learn the skills of grasping the main points and searching for information.	Comprehensive review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 4 hours)
Session 11	In-person	Listening (Part 4) and Reading (Part 7) Students continue to strengthen Listening Part 4 and develop the concentration and comprehension to handle longer spoken passages. In Reading Part 7, they train to read and interpret information efficiently while answering multiple questions.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) Preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours
Session 12	In-person	Listening (Part 4) and Reading (Part 7). Students become accustomed to advanced content in Listening Part 4 and develop the ability to distinguish and understand main points and details. In Reading Part 7, they tackle more difficult documents and strengthen their ability to read long texts and process information.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours) and preparation for the next class in vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 2 hours)	4 hours
Session 13	In-person	Final Test and Review of Material Covered So Far A final test is administered to measure students' overall ability in the Listening and Reading parts. After the test, students review and organize their own issues.	[Review] Review of the final test and comprehensive review of material covered so far (approximately 4 hours)	4 hours
Session 14	In-person	Comprehensive Review and Summary Students look back over all parts comprehensively and reconfirm their study plan and key points of test preparation for the actual TOEIC.	[Review] Comprehensive review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 4 hours)	4 hours
Session 15	On-demand	On-Demand Class (Comprehensive Review, Summary, and Feedback) Additional review videos and explanations are provided in on-demand format, and students reinforce their weak points and review on their own.	[Review] Review of vocabulary, grammar, reading comprehension, and listening (approximately 4 hours)	4 hours

Theme	Students strengthen their English proficiency using TOEIC or TOEFL study materials and build a foundation of the English proficiency needed for communication.
Course Objectives and Overview	This course comprehensively strengthens the four skills of English; the target is a TOEIC L&R score of 450 or above (600 or above, depending on the class) and, for TOEFL classes, B1 or above in Listening / SWE (Structure and Written Expression) / Reading. ・Solve TOEIC- or TOEFL-format questions, learn test strategies, and aim to raise scores. ・Acquire the self-study methods essential for raising TOEIC or TOEFL scores. ・To strengthen frequently tested vocabulary, a vocabulary test is administered in every class, and students master the usage of the vocabulary and even its pronunciation. ・Under the class plan prepared by the university's instructor, Wed. Period 2 Classes 2 and 3, and Wed. Period 2 Class ① (international students + TOEFL class) and Class ② (international students' class + general students' class), are taught by English instructors from ALC Press, Inc.
Prerequisites and Notes	This course corresponds to the TOEIC® L&R and TOEFL® ITP and is intended for students who aim to improve their English proficiency. Students of the Faculty of International Studies are assigned to classes in advance on the basis of their previous TOEIC scores and are pre-registered. Students of the Faculties of Economics, Business Administration, and Law may also take it. Among the required first-year English courses, Wed. Period 2 Class 1 is recommended for the intermediate class, Wed. Period 2 Class 2 for the elementary class, and Wed. Period 2 Class 3 for the basic class. Wed. Period 2 Class ② (international students' class + general students' class) is a class for international students and for students pre-registered on the basis of class assignment in some cases. International students of the Faculties of Economics, Business Administration, Law, and International Studies who wish to study English are encouraged to enroll actively in Wed. Period 2 Class ② (international students' class + general students' class). Wed. Period 2 Class ① (TOEFL; general students + international students; for students who wish to participate in exchange study abroad) is an Advanced class in which TOEFL is studied. Students aiming at exchange study abroad, those who wish to study for the TOEFL in the future, and international students with high English proficiency are encouraged to enroll actively.

Course Category	Faculty of International Studies Specialized Courses
Theme	The History of the Formation of the Modern World
Course Objectives and Overview	This course focuses on major changes in the history related to the formation of the problems of contemporary society, in particular changes in the correlations among regions and events. It takes a broad view of how cultures and civilizations in different regions grew and how, through interaction among them, they changed over the course of history, and it centers on the causes and consequences of representative events that had a major influence on the international community in each historical period. In particular, it examines and explains the following two points with emphasis: that a wide variety of civilizations and cultures have existed on Earth, each following its own path of development and change; and that regions, and the world as a whole, were formed through the constant movement, trade, and exchange among peoples and races with different cultural backgrounds.
Prerequisites and Notes
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	① Students will be able to grasp the major currents of history, such as the East-West trade of history represented by the Silk Road and the start of global-scale exchange through the flow of silver from South America. ② Students will be able to learn methods of analyzing changes in eras by focusing on the turning points of each period. ③Students will be able to use a historical perspective when considering the issues facing contemporary society.
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams
Method of Feedback	After each lecture, a confirmation quiz on the theme is administered, and students' reactions and questions are collected using the discussion and survey functions of the Learning Portal. The instructor then introduces students' quiz answers, questions, and impressions while providing comments and explanations of the assignments.

Theme	Issues in Japanese History
Course Objectives and Overview	While being conscious of developments in the world surrounding Japan, in particular the correlation with the East Asian world, the course takes a broad view of historical transitions from the ancient, medieval, early modern, and modern periods through the contemporary period, with the goal of understanding the points of debate and their backgrounds that connect to present-day social issues. Specifically, keeping in mind the premodern politics and culture that developed under the influence of the East Asian world, and the figure of modern Japan as it entered the international community, the lectures take up topics considered important for each period and proceed by considering questions and queries related to them.

Course Category	Faculty of International Studies Specialized Courses
Theme	Introduction to Gender Studies
Course Objectives and Overview	The binary of men/women has always been regarded as “taken for granted” and “natural.” Yet such ways of thinking are created by society and shape our everyday lives and thinking. Norms concerning sex (gender and sexuality) exert an influence on everything from the “sex” field on a job-hunting entry sheet to the words we use in daily life. As a consequence, various forms of sex discrimination arise. Academic research known as feminism and gender studies has greatly changed our society by resisting the various inequalities and forms of discrimination concerning sex. This course deals with the historical positioning of women and the changing ways in which society has been understood. Beyond looking back on history and social movements, students acquire knowledge and ways of thinking in gender studies from the perspectives of popular culture (such as Disney and Ghibli), economics, and law.
Prerequisites and Notes	In this course, assignments are set during class. These assignments are evaluated as class participation (50%). The final evaluation is based on the final examination (50%).
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	Through this lecture, the following are set as the attainment goals. ① To understand the basic concepts in gender studies. ② To understand that sex is socially constructed, as well as its political nature. ③ To critically reconsider existing social norms from the perspective of sex.

Regarding taking this course	The course is basically based on lectures, but it encourages two-way communication and active student participation. Rather than the instructor explaining alone, it emphasizes discussion through questions, in-class assignments, and reaction papers. In particular, students consider and discuss themes and issues related to gender and sexuality on the basis of their everyday experiences.

Theme	Grasping the Mechanisms and Ecology of Communication
Course Objectives and Overview	In this course, students study the mechanisms and various aspects of communication as an act in which the self attempts to understand others and to make itself understood by others. The understanding that the act of communication aims at is not an “as-is” understanding of oneself or others but a specific, intended understanding. Intended understanding shows diverse characteristics depending on the nature of the relationship among the participants in communication. The aim of this course is to understand the characteristics of intended communicative acts. It also aims to enhance the foundational qualities needed to become a more appropriate participant in communication. From the perspective of fostering employability, students develop logical thinking skills and a broad outlook.

Learning Outcomes	In contemporary society, where globalization and informatization are progressing simultaneously, forms of communication are rapidly diversifying. To respond to this trend, the following qualities are cultivated. 1. To understand the basic mechanisms of human communication. 2. To understand the biological and cognitive foundations of communication. 3. To grasp the characteristics of diverse forms of communication, such as individual-to-individual, individual-to-group, intergroup, individual-to-unspecified-many, and among unspecified-many. 4. To gain an understanding of means of communication such as language, bodily expression, images, and symbols. 5. To acquire practical responsiveness through examining persuasion, distortion of information, false rumors, advertising, urban legends, and the like.

Regarding taking this course	In our daily lives we use the concept of "culture" casually, but what does "culture" actually mean? Thinking deeply about "culture," a concept that seems understood yet is not, is the first step in learning about intercultural communication. Intercultural communication can be found not only in situations in which we communicate with foreigners abroad but also in situations closer to home. Through this course, we would like to learn together so that we may understand the diversity around us and respect others ourselves.

Session 1	In-person	Explanation of the course overview and evaluation methods Students consider three questions: What is culture? What does it mean for cultures to differ? What is communication?	After class, students review the lecture content on the basis of the distributed materials and, building on this, are given an assignment to reflect on their own daily lives and experiences and to think about culture and communication. (120 minutes) As preparation for the next class, students are assigned to read distributed materials on the differences between male culture and female culture. (120 minutes)	4 hours

Theme	Understand the diverse forms of society and culture through linguistic phenomena.
Course Objectives and Overview	The purpose of this course is to deepen examination of what language means for society and culture. In class, students compare Japanese, English, and other languages and recognize that the grammatical system of a language is an expression of a common way of thinking (values) mutually agreed upon by the people who use it. On that basis, they come to understand that, in the grammatical systems we use without thinking, certain modes of thought concerning relationships among human beings, or between human beings and nature, in each language area exert a profound influence.

Learning Outcomes	A globalizing world is a world in which a single set of values is shared and, at the same time, a world in which various cultures come into contact and fuse, while also colliding and coming into fierce conflict with one another. There, the idea of “multicultural coexistence” is not merely a pleasant-sounding slogan or a “given reality” but remains a “political position” and an “orientation” constantly challenged by the harsh realities of the prioritization of national interests and ethnic conflict. In this course, students acquire the following qualities considered necessary for individuals who foster an orientation toward multicultural coexistence. 1. To learn the basic knowledge and methods for understanding the structure and characteristics of language. 2. To gain an understanding of the various functions that human linguistic activity fulfills in society. 3. To learn keywords and key concepts for understanding the characteristics of culture. 4. To thoroughly understand the social functions of language and enhance one’s ability as an active language user. 3. To acquire a methodology for understanding the nature and characteristics of culture through linguistic phenomena. 4. To deepen understanding of the diversity and equivalence of cultures.

Theme	Students understand the values and behavioral patterns of societies and people with different cultures and cultivate the intercultural understanding required in the international community.
Course Objectives and Overview	The purpose of this course is to use the basic knowledge of the social and cultural fields learned in “The World Seen from Society and Culture” in Foundations for International Studies A to deepen understanding of the differences in the values and customs of countries, regions, and peoples with different cultural backgrounds. While citing concrete examples, students recognize differences from their own culture and acquire the ability to accept different cultures. The course also cultivates the way of thinking that forms the foundation of the international understanding required in future careers in a globalizing contemporary society.
Prerequisites and Notes	・This is a higher-level course (specialized foundation course) following “The World Seen from Society and Culture” in Foundations for International Studies A. ・Enrollment is recommended because this course deepens basic knowledge and ways of thinking about intercultural understanding and enables students to acquire the foundational knowledge and ways of thinking that should be acquired in a globalizing contemporary society. ・The course content may be adjusted as appropriate according to the level of understanding of the students.
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・To acquire basic knowledge about countries and regions with different cultural backgrounds and understand differences in the values and customs of people in each society. ・To be able to view the characteristics of one’s own culture relatively while acquiring an attitude of respecting and accepting different cultures and values. ・To be able to understand the relationships between the host society and minorities and diasporas, in light of contemporary Japanese society, which is becoming increasingly multiethnic, multilingual, and multicultural.

Theme	Understand the current state of and challenges facing global society from the perspective of sociology.
Course Objectives and Overview	The purpose of this course is to understand, from the perspective of international sociology, the current state of and challenges facing global society, which unfolds across national borders. First, students study the analytical framework (methodology) of sociology and the major subfields of sociology that contribute to an understanding of international sociology. Next, taking up concrete cases centered on the movement of people across borders, students examine their causes, current state, challenges, and countermeasures from the perspective of international sociology. Through this course, students aim to grasp the current state of the international society with which they will be involved in the future and the challenges they will face, and to acquire the ability to examine the possibilities for improving them from an international sociological perspective. Please note that the course content may be adjusted as appropriate according to the level of understanding of the students.
Prerequisites and Notes	・This is a higher-level course (specialized foundation course) intended mainly for students who have taken “Introduction to International Studies (students enrolled in AY2026)” or “Foundations for International Studies A (students enrolled in AY2025 or earlier).” ・The course aims to deepen basic knowledge and ways of thinking in international sociology and to acquire the foundational knowledge and perspectives required in a globalizing contemporary society. ・Enrollment is recommended for students who are interested in changes in the international community and issues concerning foreign nationals in Japan.
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・To be able to understand the basic research methods and analytical frameworks in sociology. ・To be able to analyze concrete social phenomena from a sociological perspective and explain the results. ・To be able to examine the movement of people across borders in contemporary global society and its impact on the basis of the findings of international sociology.

Regarding taking this course	Studying at university is not sufficient if students merely listen passively to classes. It is important for each student to collect information proactively on themes of interest and deepen their examination. For the content covered in this course, additional materials will be distributed and literature will be introduced during class as necessary. Do not stop at understanding the textbook; think about the material by connecting it with concrete cases from the international community and local communities. Students are also expected to actively read related books and materials and to expand their study toward more specialized knowledge.

Theme	This course focuses on the religions that lie behind diverse cultures.
Course Objectives and Overview	Students aim to understand the basic structure of religion and, taking up the cultures and customs found in everyday life, to acquire a tolerant attitude that allows them to engage with the religious cultures of the world, together with the ability to understand and analyze them objectively. In the lectures, students study the “doctrines,” “modes of conduct (rituals),” and “social norms” of religion in Judaism, Christianity, Islam, Hinduism, Buddhism, and Shinto. The course also explains the religious trends and ideas lying behind gender issues, the Israel issue, the invasion of Ukraine, suicide, marriage, and other topics. It is positioned as contributing to acquiring the ability to cooperate with others who have different values and cultural backgrounds and to be active as members of society, and lifelong employability.

Regarding taking this course	In Japan, things that at first glance are not rational, such as bowing and giving nods of agreement (aizuchi), are customarily practiced. Looking across the world, there are customs that are hard to call rational, as well as monuments and group behaviors that are difficult to understand. When one keeps asking about the reasons and grounds for human social practices, one sometimes arrives at religion. On the other hand, many people do not have much knowledge about religion. This course turns its attention to religion. The lectures introduce the “doctrines,” “modes of conduct (rituals),” and “social norms” of religion in Judaism, Christianity, Islam, Hinduism, Buddhism, and Shinto. They also explain the religious trends and ideas lying behind gender issues, the Israel issue, the invasion of Ukraine, suicide, marriage, and other topics.

Course Title	Introduction to Tourism	Academic Year	Fall Semester, AY2026
Instructor	YAMAMOTO Kunihiro	Year Level	1234
Course Numbering	For course numbering, please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/numbering.html	Credits	2 Credits
Grade	G2	Teaching Method	Lecture
Course Category	Faculty of International Studies Specialized Courses
Theme	Using tourism as a subject, this course helps students acquire the study habits needed at university (punctuality, organizing key points, and writing short texts) and the basics of tourism.
Course Objectives and Overview	While studying the basics of tourism (what tourism is, tourism resources, transportation, stakeholders, tourism business, marketing, and inbound tourism and its reception), the purpose of this course is to help students acquire the fundamental behaviors for university study (punctuality, understanding instructions, submitting work, and the ability to write concisely with supporting evidence). Anticipating a diverse body of students, including international students, the course proceeds mainly through lectures (short), exercises (quizzes and short written assignments), and group work.
Prerequisites and Notes	(1) Attitude toward Attending Class (Protecting the Learning Environment) This course places importance on a learning environment in which everyone can concentrate. If behavior that disrupts the progress of the class, such as talking, using a smartphone, entering and leaving the room during class, or operating an attendance device during class, is repeated, a warning will be given and it will be reflected in the evaluation, such as the participation score. (2) Attendance, Lateness, and Leaving Early Lateness is counted cumulatively, and three instances of lateness are converted into one absence. Leaving during class is, in principle, prohibited (except in cases of illness or emergency). If you unavoidably have to leave, be sure to tell the instructor. Acts such as having an attendance card read at the front of the classroom during class are prohibited, and the handling of lateness follows the instructor's instructions. Attendance is not determined solely by card reading but is judged taking into account actual participation in class. * Official absences, etc., follow university regulations. (3) Use of Generative AI Generative AI may be used for the purposes of "organizing structure, paraphrasing, polishing, and translation assistance." However, generating the entire text and fabricating experiences or facts are not permitted (they will not be recognized as learning outcomes). When instructed, submit an AI usage log (simple version). In principle, generative AI is not to be used for time-limited tasks conducted in class. Class rules (simple English): Do not disturb the class (talking, phone use, moving around, scanning cards during the lecture). 3 late arrivals = 1 absence. No leaving during class (except emergency/health reasons; tell the instructor). Attendance is based on actual participation, not only scanning your card.
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	1. To be able to organize tourism in terms of "resources, demand, reception, and stakeholders (policy)" and explain it in short written texts. 2. To be able to explain the basic geography of Japan (major regions, major cities, representative tourist destinations, and a sense of travel distances). 3. To be able to organize Japan's reception challenges by stakeholder, based on the trends in inbound tourism to Japan and comparisons with Asian countries. 4. To acquire the study habit of reading instructions, summarizing key points, and submitting work with supporting evidence.

Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams
Method of Feedback	・Explanations of the quizzes are shared in class or on the LMS. ・Feedback on short written assignments and the midterm assignment is given on the basis of evaluation criteria (rubric), and points for improvement are indicated. ・Excellent examples and examples needing improvement (anonymized) are shared in class.

Regarding taking this course	Tourism is a field deeply connected with transportation, the regional economy, residents' lives, international exchange, and policy. On the other hand, in university classes, unless students have the basics of "keeping time," "reading instructions," "writing concisely with supporting evidence," and "submitting work," they will not be evaluated, regardless of content. While studying the basics of tourism in this course, students acquire study habits. Generative AI is also used, but leaving everything to it will not build ability. Students practice how to bring the text back into their own words even when using AI in class. Steadily accumulate the quiz and short written submission each time.

Class Session	Class Format	Class Plan	Preparation and Review (Preview/Review, etc.)	Preparation /Review Time
Session 1	In-person	Session 1 Guidance: How to Study at University / Punctuality / Submission Etiquette – Explanation of how the course will proceed, evaluation, the submission method (LMS), and how to conduct group work Sharing of the attitude expected of students (prohibition of disrupting class) and the rules on lateness and leaving early (three instances of lateness = one absence; leaving during class prohibited in principle, etc.) Explanation of the operation of the quiz at the start of class (to be conducted every session from then on) Short written submission (100-150 characters): Summarize the course rules in your own words	Pre-class Study (Preparation): Look over the materials posted on the LMS before class (slides, handouts, vocabulary lists, etc.) and check key terms. Look up unfamiliar terms in a dictionary or similar resource and note them so that you can ask questions in class. Post-class Study (Review): Organize the content covered in class by key points (keywords) and rewrite it so that you can explain it in short written texts (conclusion → reason → concrete example). Theme	Learning the Characteristics of Countries and Regions of the World
Course Objectives and Overview	Currently, 196 countries are members of the United Nations (UN). However, because there are also countries that are not members, there are more than 200 countries in the world. Each country or region has its own culture, society, economy, and so on, and people live their daily lives within them. Area studies is a field of research that seeks to grasp and understand, as far as possible as they are, the ways of thinking and living of the people who live in a given country or region, including their culture and society. To learn about area studies, this course clarifies the characteristics of the world and also provides an opportunity to learn about the characteristics of its countries and regions.

Theme	Studying International Politics from the Aspects of Economy, People, and Culture
Course Objectives and Overview	The purpose of this course is to learn about the "soft" aspects of international politics—the economy, trade, people, and culture. The course also shines a spotlight not only on the bright side of globalization (becoming wealthier and more convenient) but also on its shadow side (international problems that cross borders, and diversifying conflicts and frictions). For states, security and peace are the supreme imperatives in every age. For that reason, military security has remained the most important issue in international politics and in the study of international politics. On the other hand, as globalization advances, the importance of the "soft" aspects of international politics—the economy, trade, people, and culture—is increasing rapidly. In this course, students study not only international political economy but also themes such as human security and soft power, thereby deepening their understanding of the deepening of economic and trade relations and of the cross-border movement of people and culture. In addition, in order to understand the study of international politics, this course plans to deal extensively with cases from the Asia-Pacific region and current affairs. The content may be adjusted according to the level of understanding of the students enrolled.

Regarding taking this course	It is recommended that you take this course together with International Politics I (it is not required). The content of this course has no “correct answers.” A stance of analyzing various kinds of information objectively and listening to opinions that differ from your own is highly valued. If you come across a news article related to what you learned in class, be sure to write down the key points of the news and your own opinion in your notebook. It will certainly be useful in job hunting.

Course Title	International Society and Law	Academic Year	Fall Semester, AY2026
Instructor	SUGAWARA Emi	Year Level	1234
Course Numbering	For course numbering, please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/numbering.html	Credits	2 Credits
Grade	G2	Teaching Method	Lecture
Course Category	Faculty of International Studies Specialized Courses
Theme	Considering International News from the Perspective of Law
Course Objectives and Overview	This course teaches basic knowledge for examining the various phenomena that occur in an increasingly globalized society from the perspective of law (rules). First, students study the basic knowledge of jurisprudence (the functions and types of law, hierarchical relationships, etc.); second, the basic knowledge of domestic law and international law (the process of treaty formation, the judicial system, etc.); and third, the interrelationship between the domestic legal order and the international legal order. On the basis of this foundational knowledge, students take up global issues (nationality, extradition of criminals, counterterrorism measures, measures against infectious diseases, financial crises, etc.) and deepen their examination of the dynamic interaction between domestic law and international law. The course aims to cultivate the ability to gain the indispensable “awareness” needed to be active in the international community in their future careers.
Prerequisites and Notes	None
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	Students have the basic knowledge needed for studying international law (law, states, international society, rules of international law, etc.). Students can explain the diversity of the international community from concrete cases from the perspective of “law” (they can explain the diversity of the international community, such as differences in values, from the problems and issues that arise when rules are applied). Students can explain cases using the rules of international law explained by the instructor in class. Through international cases and problems, students can accept the opinions and claims of others and other countries that differ from their own and those of their own country. On that basis, they can discuss the cases and problems.
Correspondence to Qualifications and Certification Exams
Method of Feedback	In each class, a question about the class content is posed, and students submit a reflection paper during and at the end of class. The reflection papers are given feedback in the next class and used for reviewing the class, ensuring the interactivity of the class.

Regarding taking this course	The international community is composed of approximately 200 countries and regions that are extremely diverse in history, culture, institutions, and other respects (incidentally, from Japan's standpoint, 196 states exist on Earth). On the other hand, what governs this international community is universal law (rules). We hope that you will gain the "awareness" that leads to your future specialized study and overseas experience and study abroad through the dynamic movements that arise between universal rules and the diverse countries and regions.

Theme	The way of thinking in economics is explained while taking up economic phenomena that are currently topics of discussion regarding the world economy.
Course Objectives and Overview	The purpose of this course is, after learning the basics of economics, to understand that the economies of countries around the world influence one another through trade and investment. By taking this course, students can acquire the basic knowledge of economics for understanding the economic phenomena of various countries in relation to one another.
Prerequisites and Notes	This course is an on-demand class, delivered at 9:00 a.m. every Wednesday. During the one week from 9:00 a.m. on Wednesday until 8:59 a.m. on the following Wednesday, you must complete the following: ・Read the distributed materials and understand the outline (10 minutes-1 hour) ・View the delivered video and review by rereading the lecture materials many times (at least 30 minutes) (*1) ・Respond to the questionnaire (*2) on that session's lecture content (approximately 5 minutes) ・Take the quiz (*3) on the previous session's lecture content (approximately 15 minutes) (All of the above are required.) In other words, it is important to study with a sufficient investment of time. Please note that the course schedule may be slightly modified depending on the results of the quiz for each session. ＊1 The lecture materials for each session are 6-10 A4 pages in Japanese. Even for those who can read Japanese text fluently, reading them will take about 30 minutes, and for those who are not proficient in Japanese, it is expected to take two hours or more. ＊2 Whether or not you respond to the questionnaire is used as attendance data. In the questionnaire, you must describe specifically what you understood, what you wondered about, and your requests regarding the class. In other words, responses such as "I understood" or "I did not understand" will be treated as absence, not attendance. ＊3 The quiz results account for 60 points out of the 100 points of the grade evaluation. In other words, earning good results on the quizzes is a condition for passing. As stated above, in order to pass, at least two hours of study per week are necessary.

Theme	Against the background of the basic theories of economics, the economic conditions of various countries and their transitions are explained in connection with statistical materials on the economy.
Course Objectives and Overview	The purpose of this course is to acquire the ability to read the situations of countries around the world, especially the Asia-Pacific region, and their transitions from statistical materials, and to understand the basic way of thinking in economics. By taking this course, students acquire the basic knowledge to understand, in relation to one another, the economic phenomena of various countries that are topics of discussion in newspapers, on television, and on radio.
Prerequisites and Notes	This course is conducted face-to-face. You are required to do the following post-class study. ・After class, review by rereading the lecture materials many times (at least 30 minutes) (*1) ・Respond to the questionnaire (*2) on that session's lecture content (approximately 5 minutes) ・Take the quiz (*3) on the previous session's lecture content (approximately 15 minutes) Prerequisites and Notes * 1 The lecture materials for each session are 4-8 A4 pages in Japanese. Even for those who can read Japanese text fluently, it is expected to take about 30 minutes, and for those who are not proficient in Japanese, two hours or more. * 2 The questionnaire is filled in at the end of the test on the "Learning Portal." Responses to the questionnaire must not be "I understood" or "I did not understand" but must be specific descriptions corresponding to that session's class. * 3 The test results, including the questionnaire, account for 60 points out of the 100 points of the grade evaluation. Since there are 15 classes, the points added by the test for each session are about 4 points. In other words, earning good results on the test every session is a condition for passing.
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	・To be able to understand and explain the representative items of statistical materials published by international organizations. ・To be able to understand and explain the situations of countries around the world on the basis of statistical materials. ・To be able to use the above insights to understand the content of matters covered in news such as newspapers.

Theme	Students can express themselves fluently, accurately, and effectively in well-organized ways suited to purpose and audience, on a wide range of content including abstract and specialized topics, with an understanding of implications and nuances.
Course Objectives and Overview	The aim of this course is to develop Japanese language ability to understand relatively long texts that contain diverse and advanced content and to grasp implications that are not explicitly stated. It also aims to acquire advanced command that enables fluent and natural self-expression without giving the impression of searching for words. In addition, students will be able to use Japanese flexibly and effectively according to the situation in social, academic, and professional settings and to produce texts with clear and logical structure even on complex topics. In doing so, they develop the ability to use vocabulary, connectives, and cohesive devices appropriately and to express themselves consistently as a whole. For this reason, in class, learning activities are conducted that comprehensively advance the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking to a high level, with the aim of forming the ability to put refined and persuasive Japanese expression into practical use.

It also aims to acquire advanced command that enables fluent and natural self-expression without giving the impression of searching for words. In addition, students will be able to use Japanese flexibly and effectively according to the situation in social, academic, and professional settings and to produce texts with clear and logical structure even on complex topics. In doing so, they develop the ability to use vocabulary, connectives, and cohesive devices appropriately and to express themselves consistently as a whole. For this reason, in class, learning activities are conducted that comprehensively advance the four skills of reading, writing, listening, and speaking to a high level, with the aim of forming the ability to put refined and persuasive Japanese expression into practical use.

Theme	Students strengthen their English proficiency using TOEIC or TOEFL study materials and build a foundation of the English proficiency needed for communication.
Course Objectives and Overview	This course comprehensively strengthens the four skills of English; the target is a TOEIC L&R score of 500 or above (600 or above, depending on the class) and, for TOEFL classes, B1 or above in Listening / SWE (Structure and Written Expression) / Reading. ・Solve TOEIC- or TOEFL-format questions, learn test strategies, and aim to raise scores. ・Acquire the self-study methods essential for raising TOEIC or TOEFL scores. ・To strengthen frequently tested vocabulary, a vocabulary test is administered in every class, and students master the usage of the vocabulary and even its pronunciation. ・Under the class plan prepared by the university's instructor, Wed. Period 2 Classes 2 and 3, Wed. Period 2 Class ① (international students + TOEFL class), Class ②, and Class ② (international students' class + general students' class) are taught by English instructors from ALC Press, Inc.
Prerequisites and Notes	This course corresponds to the TOEIC® L&R and TOEFL® ITP and is intended for students who aim to improve their English proficiency. Students of the Faculty of International Studies are assigned to classes in advance on the basis of their previous TOEIC scores and are pre-registered. Students of the Faculties of Economics, Business Administration, and Law may also take it. Among the required first-year English courses, Wed. Period 2 Class 1 is recommended for the intermediate class, Wed. Period 2 Class 2 for the elementary class, and Wed. Period 2 Class 3 for the basic class. Wed. Period 2 Class ② (international students' class + general students' class) is a class for international students and for students pre-registered on the basis of class assignment in some cases. International students of the Faculties of Economics, Business Administration, Law, and International Studies who wish to study English are encouraged to enroll actively in Wed. Period 2 Class ② (international students' class + general students' class). Wed. Period 2 Class ① (TOEFL; general students + international students; for students who wish to participate in exchange study abroad) is an Advanced class in which TOEFL is studied. Students aiming at exchange study abroad, those who wish to study for the TOEFL in the future, and international students with high English proficiency are encouraged to enroll actively.

Theme	Students strengthen their English proficiency using TOEIC or TOEFL study materials and build a foundation of the English proficiency needed for communication.
Course Objectives and Overview	This course comprehensively strengthens the four skills of English; the target is a TOEIC L&R score of 500 or above (600 or above, depending on the class) and, for TOEFL classes, B1 or above in Listening / SWE (Structure and Written Expression) / Reading. ・Solve TOEIC- or TOEFL-format questions, learn test strategies, and aim to raise scores. ・Acquire the self-study methods essential for raising TOEIC or TOEFL scores. ・To strengthen frequently tested vocabulary, a vocabulary test is administered in every class, and students master the usage of the vocabulary and even its pronunciation. ・Under the class plan prepared by the university's instructor, Wed. Period 2 Classes 2 and 3, Wed. Period 2 Class ① (international students + TOEFL class), Class ②, and Class ② (international students' class + general students' class) are taught by English instructors from ALC Press, Inc.
Prerequisites and Notes	This course corresponds to the TOEIC® L&R and TOEFL® ITP and is intended for students who aim to improve their English proficiency. Students of the Faculty of International Studies are assigned to classes in advance on the basis of their previous TOEIC scores and are pre-registered. Students of the Faculties of Economics, Business Administration, and Law may also take it. Among the required first-year English courses, Wed. Period 2 Class 1 is recommended for the intermediate class, Wed. Period 2 Class 2 for the elementary class, and Wed. Period 2 Class 3 for the basic class. Wed. Period 2 Class ② (international students' class + general students' class) is a class for international students and for students pre-registered on the basis of class assignment in some cases. International students of the Faculties of Economics, Business Administration, Law, and International Studies who wish to study English are encouraged to enroll actively in Wed. Period 2 Class ② (international students' class + general students' class). Wed. Period 2 Class ① (TOEFL; general students + international students; for students who wish to participate in exchange study abroad) is an Advanced class in which TOEFL is studied. Students aiming at exchange study abroad, those who wish to study for the TOEFL in the future, and international students with high English proficiency are encouraged to enroll actively.

Theme	Solidify the foundations of English proficiency and aim to improve TOEIC® L&R scores.
Course Objectives and Overview	This course comprehensively strengthens the four skills of English and aims to achieve a score of 550 or above on the TOEIC® L&R test. In class, students steadily consolidate the vocabulary and grammar items essential for raising scores and focus on strengthening their reading and listening comprehension. In addition, through output practice such as writing and speaking, they develop practical English proficiency.
Prerequisites and Notes	<Students of the Faculty of International Studies> Classes are assigned on the basis of students' past TOEIC L&R scores, and pre-registration is carried out. Because the classes are organized by proficiency level, students who have not been pre-registered but wish to take this course should refer to the guideline TOEIC scores below and select and register for the class that matches their own level of English. <Students of the Faculties of Economics, Business Administration, and Law> Registration is possible within the quota of several students per class. Students who wish to take this course should refer to the guideline TOEIC scores below and select and register for the class that matches their own level of English. ◆ Class assignment: guideline TOEIC scores Class 1: TOEIC 500 or above Class 2: TOEIC 400 or above Class 3: TOEIC 350 or above Class 4: TOEIC below 350
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	Through the work in ① to ④, aim for a TOEIC L&R score of 550 or above. ① Strengthening vocabulary and grammar Achieve a correct-answer rate of at least 80% on every quiz (frequently tested TOEIC vocabulary). ② Improving listening skills for the TOEIC Through the TOEIC Listening section (Parts 1-4), securely grasp the outline and main points of topics, and accurately understand approximately 70% of the detailed information (relationships between characters, the background of conversations, solutions and proposals, etc.), so as to grasp the gist without missing it even in complex exchanges and speeches. ③ Improving reading skills for the TOEIC Become accustomed to the formats of business documents appearing on the TOEIC (advertisements, e-mails, simple reports, etc.), grasp the purpose and main points of relatively short documents (single passages), and accurately read approximately 60% of the detailed information (content of requests, background circumstances, important keywords and conditions). ④ Autonomous learning With a strong sense of purpose to achieve the target score without fail, reliably complete assignments and work on study in an independent and planned manner.

Course Objectives and Overview	This course comprehensively strengthens the four skills of English and aims to achieve a score of 600 or above on the TOEIC® L&R test. In class, students steadily consolidate the vocabulary and grammar items essential for raising scores and focus on strengthening their reading and listening comprehension. In addition, through output practice such as writing and speaking, they develop practical English proficiency.
Prerequisites and Notes	<Students of the Faculty of International Studies> Classes are assigned on the basis of students' past TOEIC L&R scores, and pre-registration is carried out. Because the classes are organized by proficiency level, students who have not been pre-registered but wish to take this course should refer to the guideline TOEIC scores below and select and register for the class that matches their own level of English. <Students of the Faculties of Economics, Business Administration, and Law> Registration is possible within the quota of several students per class. Students who wish to take this course should refer to the guideline TOEIC scores below and select and register for the class that matches their own level of English. ◆ Class assignment: guideline TOEIC scores Class 1: TOEIC 500 or above Class 2: TOEIC 400 or above Class 3: TOEIC 350 or above Class 4: TOEIC below 350
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	Through the work in ① to ④, aim for a TOEIC L&R score of 600 or above. ① Strengthening vocabulary and grammar Achieve a correct-answer rate of at least 80% on every quiz (frequently tested TOEIC vocabulary). ② Improving listening skills for the TOEIC Through the TOEIC Listening section (Parts 1-4), securely grasp the outline and main points of topics, and accurately understand approximately 70% of the detailed information (relationships between characters, the background of conversations, solutions and proposals, etc.), so as to grasp the gist without missing it even in complex exchanges and speeches. ③ Improving reading skills for the TOEIC Become accustomed to the formats of business documents appearing on the TOEIC (advertisements, e-mails, business notices, simple reports, etc.), grasp the purpose and main points of relatively long single passages and short double passages, and correctly read approximately 70% of the detailed information (detailed conditions, the roles of characters and organizations, implied background circumstances). ④ Autonomous learning With a strong sense of purpose to achieve the target score without fail, reliably complete assignments and work on study in an independent and planned manner.

Theme	By learning the hottest news occurring around the world in English, students improve their vocabulary and grammar, acquire the ability to understand and communicate in academic English, and develop an international outlook through the angles taken by English-language reporting.
Course Objectives and Overview	In this course, students learn English news disseminated mainly by the mass media in real time, thereby acquiring accurate English reading and listening comprehension. By learning the vocabulary, expressions, and usage employed in the media, they aim to improve their academic English skills. They also acquire the basic literacy needed to read English-language papers and articles as prior research when writing their graduation theses. In class, by reading and viewing news from a variety of fields, students advance their specialized knowledge and logical thinking and broaden their outlook. Through research, presentations, and discussion, they acquire the ability to understand, communicate, and debate, and while improving their overall practical command of English, they cultivate a global perspective and examine events occurring in the world.

Theme	Acquiring Practical Business English and Professional Conduct for Job Interviews and Employment
Course Objectives and Overview	This course aims to develop the practical English communication skills and professional conduct required of a new employee, assuming the workplace after employment. In the second semester, the main subjects of study are situations actually faced in the workplace, such as reporting, informing, and consulting on business matters, making requests and confirmations, and responding when problems arise. In particular, taking into account the senior-junior and hierarchical relationships characteristic of Japanese workplaces, the course emphasizes communication that is mindful of wording, attitude, and interpersonal distance according to the other person and the situation. The aim of this course is not to speak English fluently but to cultivate the basic ability and judgment to understand instructions and exchanges in English and to respond appropriately as a member of the workplace. In addition, the course continues to be run in a manner that simulates a business environment, and emphasizes behavioral aspects such as attendance, punctuality, wording, attitude, and compliance with instructions. These are indispensable elements in the workplace, and students are expected to act not as “students” but as “new employees.” Through this course, in addition to English expressions and knowledge, students acquire an understanding of workplace human relationships, appropriate responsiveness, self-regulation, and a responsible attitude toward conduct, and aim to improve the employability they can use in practice in their future working lives.
Prerequisites and Notes	Among the group of Business English courses, this course aims to develop the practical communication skills and professional conduct required of a new employee, assuming the workplace after employment. No particular enrollment requirements or selection are set, but the course proceeds on the premise that students can understand basic instructions and exchanges in English. For that reason, a certain level of understanding of basic English vocabulary and sentence structure is desirable. In addition, because this course includes exercise-based and participatory elements and conducts activities assuming responses in the workplace, attendance and continuous, proactive participation in class are prerequisites. In taking this course, students are expected to prepare and review the learning content outside of class and to try to improve their own responses and conduct through practice and reflection in class.
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	Through this course, students aim to acquire the following knowledge, skills, and attitudes. 1. Students understand the basic situations expected in the workplace as a new employee (reporting, informing, and consulting; requests; confirmations; responding when problems arise) and can convey content appropriate to the situation in English. 2. Students understand business instructions and exchanges in English and can respond with a tone, attitude, and expressions that are mindful of the other person and their position (senior, superior, colleague). 3. Students understand the influence that senior-junior and hierarchical relationships in the workplace have on communication and can respond with an awareness of appropriate interpersonal distance and conduct. 4. Through activities and feedback that assume workplace situations, students reflect on their own responses and conduct, identify points for improvement, and reflect them in their next actions. 5. Students are conscious of the position required of a new employee, participate in class with a responsible attitude, and can practice basic professional conduct assumed in the workplace.

Method of Feedback	Feedback is provided for every class and for each assignment (examinations, reports, submissions, etc.). In class, through individual oral feedback and comments to the class as a whole, points for improvement in understanding and responses are indicated. Assignments and submissions are returned with comments and, where necessary, corrections. In addition to explanations given during class time, explanations and supplementary notes on examinations and evaluation may also be presented through the Learning Portal. Through this feedback, students are supported in reflecting on their own learning content and conduct and in applying them to their next learning and practice.

Theme	Business English Communication Dealing with Workplace Adaptation and Interpersonal Relationships as a New Employee
Course Objectives and Overview	The purpose of this course is to improve practical English communication skills that can be used in business settings. Students learn expressions and vocabulary commonly used in the workplace, such as self-introductions, business dining, greetings, appointments, and telephone handling. The course also aims to deepen intercultural understanding and to enable students to communicate smoothly with international business partners. Through role-plays and discussions, students acquire English they can actually use. Some experience in learning English is desirable, but the content is designed so that students of a wide range of levels can participate.
Prerequisites and Notes	There are mainly two purposes for attending class: 1. To ask the teacher and other students questions about homework and English in general. 2. To actually use the knowledge gained while doing homework. Students' goals in class are to learn and to help one another learn. The teacher's role is to support students' learning. Points to note: If a student lacks the motivation to learn, the teacher cannot force them to learn. Please also refrain from behavior that hinders those who are motivated to learn. Have an attitude of actively engaging in study.
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	Learn the English that forms the foundation of business English and aim for English proficiency equivalent to a TOEIC score of 400 or above. The goal of this class is to develop skills specializing in speaking in particular among the four skills of English. Furthermore, it aims to develop the ability to make use of the knowledge and skills acquired to discuss with a variety of people with differing values and opinions in Japan and abroad, deepen learning, and collaborate to contribute to society.

Theme	Develop the ability to guide visitors around Japan and the world in English in actual tourism settings.
Course Objectives and Overview	The purpose of this course is to acquire the foundations of the English communication skills needed in actual tourism settings. Using tourist destinations in Japan and around the world as subject matter, students learn expressions and vocabulary that can handle diverse tourism situations such as guidance, proposals, reservations, cultural explanations, and trouble handling. In class, in addition to basic skills such as reading comprehension and listening, students enhance their ability to use English according to the situation through practical activities such as role-plays and pair work. The course also touches on the cultural background and manners related to tourism and comprehensively develops communication skills for responding appropriately to the needs of tourists while cultivating a perspective of intercultural understanding.
Prerequisites and Notes
Relation to the Diploma Policy (DP)	For the relation between this course and the Diploma Policy (DP), please refer to the following URL. https://www.keiho-u.ac.jp/faculty/taken/curriculummap.html
Learning Outcomes	Students can grasp tourists' needs in English, compare multiple options, and make optimal proposals. Students can briefly explain in English the cultural background, attractions, and points of caution regarding tourist destinations in Japan and around the world. Students can read tourism-related English texts such as brochures, advertisements, and guidance texts, accurately extract the key information, and summarize it orally. Students can use, in appropriate English, the expressions needed in basic tourism situations such as reservations, guidance, inquiries, and handling complaints. Students can respond in considerate English to troubles (delays, lost items, weather changes, religion, dietary restrictions, etc.). Through role-plays and pair work, students can demonstrate communication skills of asking questions of one another, confirming, and keeping the exchange going. Students can understand vocabulary and expressions related to tourism situations and use them in practical tasks. Students have a perspective of intercultural understanding and can give explanations in English that include cultural consideration and manners.
